PREFACE

History of the Collegiate WEBSTER'S NEW COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY is an entirely new book — newly edited and typeset and presented in a new format. It will, however, have for many persons the characteristics of an old friend; for it is but the latest member of the century-old MERRIAM-WEBSTER family. For many years MERRIAM-WEBSTER dictionaries have formed a series, in which the unabridged dictionary is the parent work and the COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY the largest abridgment. From each successive revision of the unabridged work new abridged books have sprung. In 1898 the first edition of the COLLEGIATE appeared. Its size, appearance, typography, and, above all, its wealth of material and scholarly presentation quickly won for it a high place in the regard of both general reader and scholar. In 1910 a second edition appeared, followed by new editions or revisions in 1916, 1931, and 1936. This NEW COLLEGIATE, in preparation for the past four years, incorporates the best of the time-tested features of its predecessors.

Scope and Format. The general content and over-all plan of the previous edition (WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY, Fifth Edition) have proved so well adapted to the needs of its users that any attempt to change its essential character and form seemed inadvisable. The editors felt, too, that there were relatively few entries, both in its main vocabulary and in the special sections, that could be omitted without loss to the user of WEBSTER'S NEW COLLEGIATE. At the same time, there were many new terms and meanings, many older terms and meanings of increasing importance or frequency, many abbreviations, and many proper names that must be added in a new edition. The problem was how to retain most of the material of the previous work while adding material essential to the new book without markedly increasing its physical size. The new format of the present book is the answer. The wider page, with its wider column, has enabled the editors to achieve this dual aim within a handy-sized volume.

Typography. The type faces used in this book are those of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition, for which they were carefully chosen, after extensive experimenting, for their appearance and readability. These type faces have stood the further tests of time and use in the previous edition of the COLLEGIATE.

The General Vocabulary. Once again the vocabulary of the COLLEGIATE has been selected to meet the needs both of the college student and of the general reader seeking clear and accurate, but not encyclopedic, information. Every entry and every definition of the previous edition have been reviewed, and many of them have been revised to incorporate additional, often new, information or to effect improvements in the former presentation. The definitions have for the most part been based on the most recent available information contained in the latest printings of the parent work, WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY, Second Edition, with such modifications or adaptations as are required by the smaller scope of the COLLEGIATE. Wherever they are needed and, indeed, as freely as possible within the limitations of the space, phrases and sentences have been given that illustrate the definitions. The literary vocabulary contains many additions, consisting principally of new terms and meanings and some older ones of increased importance or frequency, the inclusion of which is often the direct result of suggestions from users of the previous edition. The NEW COLLEGIATE follows the practice of its predecessors in including only a limited selection of slang, dialectal, and obsolete terms and meanings. Since behind the present work are all the vast resources of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition, containing some 550,000 vocabulary entries, the problem has been one of selection of terms to be included here. Usefulness has been the criterion.

Special Subjects. The greater emphasis on the vocabularies of technical and scientific fields, which was perhaps the most noticeable difference between the previous edition and earlier COLLEGIATES, has been continued in this NEW COLLEGIATE. The wealth of information prepared by the 207 consulting editors for the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition, has been freely drawn upon and a great deal of new material has been added. Many of the new definitions have been specially prepared or reviewed for the present work by various members of this group of consultants and by others, particularly Dr. Robert A. Hall, Jr., Associate Professor of Linguistics at Cornell University, Dr. Ralph Harper, Instructor in English at Harvard University, Dr. James A. Hootman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and Dr. Hans Kohn, Professor of History at Smith College.

In the selection of newer terms for inclusion in this book the important contributions to the language resulting from World War II play a major part. Such terms include not only those in the military field (such as bazooka, blitzkrieg, foxhole, jeep, kamikaze, Panzer, roadblock) but also those in many other fields, such as aeronautics, chemistry, electronics, nuclear physics, and medicine.

Trade-marks. Public interest in the status, the pronunciation, and the application of many terms originally coined for use as trade-marks makes such terms a matter of lexical concern. In a dictionary of this scope, however, it is possible to include only a limited number of those trade-marks most likely to be sought by the average dictionary user. All entries suspected of being trade-marks have been investigated in the files of the United States Patent Office at Washington, D. C., and those which the evidence showed to be trade-marks have been defined as such. The inclusion of a term in this dictionary is not, however, to be taken as an expression of the publishers' opinion as to whether or not it is subject to proprietary rights, but only as an expression of their belief that such a term is of sufficiently general use and interest to warrant its inclusion in a work of this kind. No definition in this dictionary is to be regarded as affecting the validity of any trade-mark.

Presentation of Material. Although the presentation of the material conforms to accepted dictionary practices and will in general offer no difficulty to most users of this book, occasional details may raise questions requiring precise answer. The editors, with the help of users of the previous edition, have tried to anticipate and answer all such questions in the section of Explanatory Notes, pages xviii–xx. Every user of this book, even the experienced dictionary consulter, will gain much from a reading of these pages.

Order of Definitions. In general the order of definitions follows the practice of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, where the earliest ascertainable meaning is placed first and later meanings are arranged in the order shown to be most probable by dated citations and semantic development. Technical senses, except in a few cases where they are essential elements in this pattern, are placed after nontechnical senses and are arranged according to the alphabetical order of their labels (such as Bot., Chem., Med.). This historical arrangement is of especial value to those interested in the development of meanings and offers no difficulty to the user who is merely looking for a particular meaning.

Pronunciation. The pronunciations given in this dictionary are based on those of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition, and reflect the large body of firsthand information specially gathered for that work from scores of persons in all parts of the United States and elsewhere in the English-speaking world. The pronunciations of the individual entries in the general vocabulary and in the special sections are given in a phonetic alphabet that can be readily understood. A concise key to this MERRIAM-WEBSTER phonetic alphabet is printed at the front and back of the book, just inside the covers, where it can be found most easily and quickly. Users particularly interested in pronunciation are urged to read the Guide to Pronunciation (pages vii–xvii), which not only supplements this key by explaining fully each symbol used in the pronunciations but also discusses in some detail many general matters of pronunciation. This material was condensed by Dr. John S. Kenyon, eminent authority on pronunciation, from the fuller treatment prepared by him for the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition.

Etymologies. For vocabulary entries retained from the previous edition the etymologies, with such changes as are required to reflect recent information, are taken over from that book, for which they were condensed from those of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition. These etymologies were prepared by Dr. E. E. Thompson of the editorial staff in consultation with Dr. Harold H. Bender of Princeton University, chief consultant in etymology, who has written or supervised the writing of the etymologies of new entries as well.

Synonyms. Brief articles discriminating from one another words of closely associated meaning have long been a valuable feature of the COLLEGIATE. In the present book the number of these articles has been increased. The articles, adapted from the fuller treatments in WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY OF SYNONYMS, were prepared by Miss Rose F. Egan, who had a major part in the writing of that book.

Pictorial Illustrations. The wide scope of illustrations that was a feature of previous editions of the COLLEGIATE has been retained in this new work. Many new illustrations have been prepared especially for this work. In general the aim has been to include illustrations not for their decorative quality but for their value in clarifying definitions.

Supplementary Features. Except for the section of Foreign Words and Phrases, the material of which has been incorporated in the general vocabulary of this book, the supplementary features of the previous edition have been retained.

The Pronouncing Gazetteer gives the spelling, syllabic division, and pronunciation of over ten thousand names, a marked increase over the number listed in the previous edition, and continues to provide information on location, political status or ownership, population, and other statistics (such as length of rivers, height of mountains, area of political divisions, lakes, etc.) in the concise form familiar to users of the COLLEGIATE.

The Biographical section gives the spelling, pronunciation, given names, dates, nationality, and a brief indication of achievements or sphere of activity for a selected list of names of persons, ancient and modern, of general interest. The number of entries has been increased to upwards of five thousand.

The list of Colleges and Universities, which has proved to be one of the most often consulted of the special sections of the COLLEGIATE, has been completely revised and its basis of selection broadened to include a very much larger number of institutions. The pronunciation and syllabic division of the names of these institutions are given wherever needed.

The lists of Abbreviations and of Given Names have been revised and many entries have been added.

The section of Arbitrary Signs and Symbols, the Vocabulary of Rhymes, and the several sections treating Orthography, and Punctuation, Compounds, Capitals, etc., and Preparation of Copy for the Press have been revised and retained.

Editorial Staff. The editing, checking, proofreading, and similar operations have been carried out by the trained editorial staff of G. & C. MERRIAM COMPANY, many of whom worked not only on the preparation of the previous edition of the COLLEGIATE but also on the NEW INTERNATIONAL, Second Edition. An exhaustive list of staff members who contributed to this NEW COLLEGIATE, some by performing essential clerical work and others by preparing or reviewing a few definitions, would serve little purpose; but it would be ungracious not to mention the chief participants in various phases of the work. The reviewing and writing of definitions were done by Dr. Lucius H. Holt, Managing Editor, Mr. Edward F. Oakes, Associate Editor, and the following Assistant Editors: Mr. Hubert P. Kelsey, Dr. Everett E. Thompson, Dr. Edward A. H. Fuchs, Dr. Philip B. Gove, Dr. Donald W. Lee, and Miss Anne M. Driscoll; pronunciations by Miss Elsie Mag and Mr. Edward Artin; synonyms by Miss Rose F. Egan; cross-referencing and checking by Miss Ervina E. Foss; proofreading by Mr. Hubert H. Roe and Miss Rita L. Goyette; the editing of various special sections as follows: Abbreviations by Miss Driscoll, Biographies by Dr. Gove, Colleges and Universities by Dr. Thompson, Gazetteer by Dr. Thompson, Dr. Lee, and Miss Foss, Given Names and Rhymes by Miss Egan, Orthography, Punctuation, etc. by Mr. Oakes.

The typesetting and electrotyping have been done by The Riverside Press, whose staff have once again given their hearty co-operation and have assisted with excellent proofreading.

WEBSTER'S NEW COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY represents the results of the collaborative efforts of the permanent MERRIAM-WEBSTER editorial staff, with the assistance of others previously mentioned. It is the product of an organization with the background of more than one hundred years of continuous dictionary-making experience. It is the latest addition to the MERRIAM-WEBSTER series of dictionaries which have served successive generations. We offer it to the user with the conviction that it will serve him well.

General Editor.

A GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION

KEY TO THE SYMBOLS USED IN THE RESPELLING FOR PRONUNCIATION

REFERENCES. Numbers following the respelling for pronunciation of some words in the Vocabulary refer to sections in this GUIDE.

ACCENTS AND HYPHENS. The principal accent is indicated by a heavy mark (′), and the secondary accent by a lighter mark (′), at the end of the syllable. Syllabic division is indicated by a centered period, except where this is replaced by an accent mark or by a hyphen used to join the members of words written or printed with a hyphen.

FOREIGN SOUNDS for which no special symbols are provided are represented by the nearest English equivalents.

ˈ, as in par′don (pär′dˈn), eat′en (ētˈn), e′vil (ēˈvl), indicates that the following consonant is syllabic (§ 38), or, occasionally, indicates unusual consonant combinations, as in Knut (kˈnōōt).

THE ALPHABET OF THE INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ASSOCIATION (IPA)

The following symbols have each the sound values shown in the key words. The IPA symbols and words respelled with them are in square brackets [ ].

CONSONANTS

[p]	in	peep	[θ]	in	ether	[tʃ]	in	church
[b]	"	bib	[ð]	"	either	[dʒ]	"	judge
[m]	"	maim	[f]	"	fife	[r]	"	rear
[t]	"	toot	[v]	"	valve	[l]	"	lull
[d]	"	deed	[s]	"	cease	[h]	"	hail
[n]	"	noon	[z]	"	zones	[w]	"	wail
[k]	"	cook	[ʃ]	"	mission	[hw]	"	whale
[g]	"	gig	[ʒ]	"	vision	[j]	"	you
[ŋ]	"	sing

NOTE: For convenience in printing, the symbol [g] may be substituted for [g].

VOWELS

[i]	in	beet
[ɪ]	"	sit
[e]	"	chaotic
[eɪ]	"	cave
[ɛ]	"	set
[æ]	"	sat
[ɑ]	"	father
[a]	"	ask as often pronounced in America (between [æ] and [ɑ]. See § 9)
[ɔ]	"	all, horse
[ɒ]	"	sorry as pronounced in England and often in America (between [ɑ] and [ɔ])
[o]	"	notation
[oʊ]	"	go
[ʊ]	"	pull
[u]	"	pool
[ʌ]	"	sun (used only in stressed syllables)
[ɜ]	in	bird as pronounced in southern England and parts of eastern and southern America (only in stressed syllables)
[ɚ]	"	bird as pronounced by the majority of Americans (only in stressed syllables)
[ɾ]	"	better as pronounced by the majority of Americans (only in unstressed syllables)
[ə]		in sofa (only in unstressed syllables)

NOTE: [ɚ] is not a symbol of the IPA, which at present has no unambiguous symbol for the sound.

[aɪ] in ice [aʊ] in house [ɔɪ] in boy

[ɪu] in mute: the symbols [ju] are used when the first element is [j] as in use, instead of [ɪ].

NOTE: [eɪ] and [oʊ], given above, are also diphthongs, the usual sounds of "long a" and "long o" (see §§ 5, 69).

NON-ENGLISH CONSONANTS

[ç] = ch in German ich and Scottish heich "high" [hiç], the voiceless palatal fricative (§ 60).

[x] = ch in German ach and Scottish loch [lɒx], the voiceless velar fricative (§ 60).

NON-ENGLISH VOWELS

[y] in French pur, German fühlen, — the high-front-round vowel (§ 122)

[ø] " French creuse, German Goethe, — the mid-front-round vowel (§ 117).

[œ] " French seul, German können, — the low-front-round vowel (§ 117).

The symbols [l̩], [m̩], [n̩], [r̩] represent l, m, n, and r sounds that form syllables either alone or with nonsyllabic sounds, as [bæt′l̩, bæt′l̩d, kæz′m̩, kæz′m̩z, fæt′n̩, fæt′n̩d, bɛt′r̩, bɛt′r̩d].

The colon [ː] after a symbol indicates that its sound is long in duration as compared with that of the unmarked symbol. The raised period [ˑ] may be used for intermediate length.

The sign [˖] after a vowel symbol (as [ɛ˖]) indicates a pronunciation of it with slightly raised tongue; [˗] (as [ɛ˗]), with slightly lowered tongue, [+] (as [o+]), with slightly advanced tongue; and [−] (as [e−]), with slightly retracted tongue.

SYMBOLS USED TO INDICATE PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING

To indicate PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING, the table below may be used in connection with the one on p. vii. For indicating PRONUNCIATION BY RESPELLING, however, the table on p. vii is complete in itself and is alone used throughout this dictionary.

The table below is to be used only when any letter of a word has a sound that is represented in the table on p. vii by a different letter. Thus, in the respelling table s is used for one sound only, that in sin or so. To show the z sound of s (as in his) without respelling, the marked s (s̱) from the table below should be used, — thus, hi̱s. In the table below, the symbols in parentheses are the equivalent symbols from the respelling table.

In digraphs, mark only the letter that is to be regarded as sounded, as in breāk, brĕad, yīēld, vēil, etc. Silent e at the end of a syllable, as in fate, etc., need not be marked. ce, ci, sci, se, si, or ti before a vowel, and immediately after an accented syllable, usually have the sound of sh, and need not be marked. Where desirable, any letter regarded as silent may be shown as an unmarked italic. In a few words, the pronunciation can be indicated only by respelling.

ă (= ə),	as in	li′ăr, cow′ărd, mus′tărd.
a (= ŏ),	" "	what, was, qual′i·ty.
A, ą (= ô),	" "	all, swąrm, tąlk.
Au, au, aw (= ô),	" "	au′thor, law.
E, ę (= ā),	" "	ęight, prey, vęin, o·bey′; or (= ă) as in mę·lee′.
Ę, ę (= ă),	" "	thęre, hęir, whęre·in′.
Ę, ę (= ū),	" "	ẽr′mine, e·tẽr′nal, swẽrve.

I. PRONUNCIATION OF MODERN ENGLISH

STANDARD PRONUNCIATION

Standard Pronunciation. The term correct pronunciation is often used. Yet it is probable that many who use the term would find it difficult to give a precise and clear definition of the sense in which they use it. When the essential facts are considered, "correctness of pronunciation" must be a flexible term It is perhaps as accurate a definition as can be made to say that a pronunciation is correct when it is in actual use by a sufficient number of cultivated speakers. This is obviously elastic, depending both on knowledge — not always obtainable — of the number of users, and on judgment as to the cultivation of the speakers.

The standard of English pronunciation, so far as a standard may be said to exist, is the usage that now prevails among the educated and cultured people to whom the language is vernacular; but, since somewhat different pronunciations are used by the cultivated in different regions too large to be ignored, we must frankly admit the fact that, at present, uniformity of pronunciation is not to be found throughout the English-speaking world, though there is a very large percentage of practical uniformity.

The function of a pronouncing dictionary is to record as far as possible the pronunciations prevailing in the best present usage, rather than to attempt to dictate what that usage should be. In so far as a dictionary may be known and acknowledged as a faithful recorder and interpreter of such usage, so far and no farther may it be appealed to as an authority.

A further factor in the determination of correct pronunciation is the style of speech, within the same regional form, used for different occasions. The most important of these different styles is what may be called the cultivated colloquial, which has been aptly termed the style of well-bred ease. This is the most used of the standard styles, it is acceptable to every class of society, whether used by them or not, and its sound system represents the main current of progress, change, and unification of the language as a whole.

It is unfortunate that with some the term colloquial has somewhat fallen into disrepute, the impression having gained ground that a word marked "Colloquial" in a dictionary or similar work is thereby condemned as not in the best use. See the definition of colloquial in the Vocabulary.

In public worship, especially in reading from the Bible, the Prayer Book, or similar authoritative work, the rate of speech is often slower than in ordinary conversation or normal public utterance. The articulation of consonants is more distinct, and the vowels are often of greater length. The unaccented vowels are often sounded as if under secondary accent, as in vulgate (vŭl'gāt), converse, v. (kŏn·vûrs'), triumvirate (trī·ŭm'vĭ·rāt), labor (lā'bôr), etc. Such pronunciations with full vowel are confined to solemn or other very deliberate style.

§ 1. ACCENT

Accent may be defined as the prominence given to a syllable or a word which makes it stand out to the attention above adjacent syllables or words. Accent that distinguishes the syllables of words is called word accent, or syllabic accent. Accent that distinguishes words in a group is called sentence accent

The term stress, which in a strict sense means force of expiration, is commonly used to mean accent, since it is the principal element of prominence. For clearness, stress will here be used as a general term for accent (prominence) both of syllables and words, accent will be used only of word accent, or word stress; while the prominence that distinguishes words in a sense group will here be called sense stress (other terms being sentence stress, sentence accent, and emphasis). Of the various degrees of accent, only the primary (′) and the secondary (ˌ) need be marked.

§ 2. SHIFTING ACCENT

Shifting Accent. In many words and phrases, chiefly in adjectives and adverbs, the accent is often variable, being stronger on one syllable or the other according to the rhythm of the syllables in the context. Thus, we say, The room is air'tight', but an air'tight' room'.

In addition to the influence of sense stress and sentence rhythm, a number of other causes contribute to shifting and variable accent. One of the most potent of these is the emphasis of contrast. Such a word as exte'rior or inte'rior by itself has the accent here marked; but when contrasted, these become ex'terior and in'terior. So up'stairs', down'stairs', when contrasted, become up'stairs', etc.

Emphasis of intensity also frequently produces shift of accent, as in ab'solute'ly, emphatic form ab'solute'ly. It is especially common in adverbs ending in -arily, as ar'bitrar'ily, nec'essar'ily, etc. Under emphasis these words are often pronounced ar'bitrar'ily, nec'essar'ily.

As a consequence of the various influences mentioned, in actual speech many words in English have no fixed accent.

In this dictionary, as a rule, one accentuation is given, together with a reference (2) to this section. But the accentuation given in words of this sort may not be more "correct" than the one not given: the two merely represent different uses of the word, both equally correct. Usually, compound adjectives are entered in their predicate or absolute form, with even accent. This is taken as the basic form, as it is in most cases the original form, from which the attributive form (′ ′) is shifted. In some instances, however, the unevenly accented form is entered.

§ 3. BRITISH AND AMERICAN ACCENT

British and American Accent. A considerable group of words of French and Latin origin show a historical difference of accentuation in British and American usage. The most numerous of these are words ending in -ary (necessary), -ery (cemetery), -ory (dormitory). In Old French these words had primary accent on -ar-, -er-, -or-, and secondary accent on the second syllable before (nec'essar'ie, etc.). In English the secondary accent became the main one, and the former primary became secondary (nec'essar'y), or the primary sometimes fell on the third syllable before the secondary (lab'orator'y). But recently in southern England the secondary accent has been dropped, and the more usual British pronunciation is now nĕs'ĕsĕrĭ, dôr'mĭtĕrĭ, etc. The older British pronunciation is, however, still frequently heard in England, and it is universal in America, except for the comparatively few instances in which there is recent influence from British practice. Those Americans who have adopted the newer pronunciation have usually done so in only a few of the large number of words of this class so pronounced in England. In England, on the other hand, it has affected all the words of the group. There the loss of the subordinate accent has naturally resulted in the reduction of the syllable that bore it, in some words suppressing it entirely. Hence in England are often heard the pronunciations mĭl'ĭtrĭ, dĭk'sh'nrĭ, ôr'd'nrĭ, sĕk'rĕtrĭ. In a few words the accent has been moved from the first to the second syllable in British usage, as in labor'atory, axil'lary, coral'lary, thus preserving the unaccented syllables.

In a group of words ending in -ative (appreciative, cumulative, legislative, etc.) often paralleling verbs in -ate, British pronunciation is in a transition state, a subordinate accent, or at least a full vowel, being sometimes retained (admin'is·tra'tive), or the accent being lost and the vowel obscured, as in cumulative (kū'mū·lă·tĭv). In America such words as a rule have the full vowel and a subordinate accent; but when the main accent immediately precedes the syllable in which the a occurs, and in a few other words, the syllable is also reduced in American use (dĕmŏn'strə'tĭv, ăf'fûr'mə'tĭv).

In the small group of words ending in -mony, usage differs in England and America as in those in -ary; as, testimony (Brit. tĕs'tĭmŭnĭ, Amer. tĕs'tĭmō'nĭ).

In a few other words British practice tends to one accent and an obscure vowel where America has two accents and a fuller vowel; as, melancholy (Brit. mĕl'ăngkŭlĭ, Amer. mĕl'ăngkŏl'ĭ), necromancy.

In compound names in -borough (or -burgh), -bury (or -bery), British practice usually obscures or drops the vowel of the next to the last syllable, as in Scarborough (-bŭrŭ; -brŭ). Sometimes an alternating rhythmical secondary accent is heard with full vowel, as in Canterbury (kăn'tĕrbĕrĭ; -brĭ; or -bĕr'ĭ). In compounds with -berry (strawberry) the pronunciation -bĕrĭ; -brĭ is there the rule, though sometimes -bĕr'ĭ is heard. In the eastern United States sometimes the same obscuration is heard in strawberry, blackberry, etc., but in the country as a whole the full vowel is used (strô'bĕr'ĭ).

§ 4. STRESSED AND UNSTRESSED MONOSYLLABLES

Stressed and Unstressed Monosyllables. Prepositions (at, for, from, to, etc.), auxiliary and copulative verbs (am, are, can, has, must, etc.), conjunctions (and, but, or, than, etc.), pronouns (he, her, me, your, etc.), and occasionally some other words, under the conditions of sense stress may receive any degree of stress from the lowest to the highest. Accordingly the vowels of these words vary from the full and "proper" sound suggested by the spelling to an obscure sound. Note the sounds of to in the natural utterance of the sentence, It began to move to and fro. In normal speech the unstressed to is here pronounced tŭ, while stressed to is tōō. Such words, though having only one spelling form as a rule, in actual speech have one stressed pronunciation and one or more unstressed pronunciations, — the difference, though really marked, often passing unnoticed because of the identity of spelling and similarity of meaning.

The stressed form is always used when the word is mentioned alone, not as part of a context; it is therefore necessary, in order to pronounce an unstressed form, to use it naturally, as if unconsciously, in a phrase, clause, or sentence; if pronounced by itself the stressed form will inevitably be spoken. Most of the words have more than one unstressed form, depending partly on the style of speech, partly on the preceding and following sounds, and partly on the rhythmic succession of syllables in the context.

II. THE SOUNDS OF SPOKEN ENGLISH

A

§ 5. ā as in fāte, āle, māk'er, etc., is commonly called "long a." In standard English, ā is not usually a pure, or simple, sound, but is a diphthong, with several closely similar varieties, often beginning with the tongue a little higher than for ĕ (as in mĕt) and moving toward ĭ (as in ĭt). The second element, or vanish, of the ā sound appears in accented syllables in both England and America when the sound is final or before voiced consonants, as in dāy, āle. But in America, before voiceless consonants it is usually not prominent and is sometimes lacking, as in hāte. In unaccented syllables, especially before vowels, the vanish may be absent in both England and America (chā·ot'ic).

The sound (ā) is also otherwise variously represented in the ordinary spelling, as in pain, day, break, veil, obey, and exceptionally in gaol, gauge.

§ 6. â as in câre is a relatively long vowel formerly identical with the ā sound, but gradually lowered by the influence of a following r to a more open front sound, reaching and passing below the position for ĕ in vĕry.

The â sound may be described as a front vowel lying in tongue position between the ĕ in vĕry and the ă in măn. Two principal varieties exist in standard speech; one somewhat nearer acoustically and organically to ĕ than to ă, and the other decidedly nearer to ă than to ĕ. Both varieties are widespread in England and America alike, often occurring with different speakers in the same locality.

The typical occurrence of â is in accented syllables formerly (17th century) containing a long ā sound, of various origin and spelling, before r, as in aware, fare, there, bear, chair, prayer, vary, fairy, various, etc.; and many longer words, as precarious, barbarian.

As stated above, the pronunciation of these words is not uniform in cultivated speech. In America ā may still be heard in vāry, barbārian, and in names like Sārah, Māry. Some speakers used a lengthened ĕ sound in Sarah, Hungarian, vary (nearly like very), Mary (nearly like merry), while in such words as spare, compare, they would use the lower sound â, as also in wâry, by analogy of awâre, bewâre.

When the vowel is followed by r and another vowel in longer words, the tendency (in America, at least) is toward the short ĕ sound in popular words, as in Maryland (mĕr'ĭ·lănd), necessary (nĕs'ĕ·sĕr'ĭ).

For those words (barbarian, etc.) that may be pronounced with either ā or â, the marking â is used in this dictionary as conforming to the more general tendency to lower the vowel. In Latin words, however, the older ā is retained in accord with the customary more formal and somewhat artificial pronunciation of Latin words and phrases and technical terms: lares (lā'rēz).

Other spellings for â are seen in there, pear, air, heir, prayer, e'er.

§ 7. ă as in hăt, băck, răn'dom, păr'ity, etc., is commonly called "short a." Its spelling is almost invariably a, exceptionally ai, as in plaid.

The standard sound ă is low-front, the mouth being nearly or quite as wide open as for ä in ärt, but the tongue somewhat farther forward and the front (but not the tip) elevated instead of the back, as it is (though less) for ä. This is the sound often popularly called "flat a," with reference to certain supposed acoustic qualities, in contrast to "broad a," as in father.

§ 8. ä occurs in ärm, färr, fä'ther, äh, älms, pälm, with equivalent spellings in hearth, ser'geant, and exceptionally in memoir (mĕm'wär; -wôr).

This sound is classed by some phoneticians as mid-back (unrounded), i. e., made with the back of the tongue in a position midway between high and low, and with the lips not rounded. Others, however, class it as low-back. The Southern British ä is, however, pronounced with the tongue somewhat farther forward than for the usual American ä.

In Southern British and with some Americans the ä sound occurs also in such words as chaff, path, grass, ask, chance, can't, etc. For further treatment, see § 9.

In the larger part of America and Canada the ä sound is used in many words spelled with o, as top, doll, etc., and in words like what, want, etc., with w before a (see §§ 11, 73).

The stressed ä sound in all words except those spelled with o (top) is now a relatively long sound.

The symbol ă is also used to represent a shorter ä sound in unaccented syllables, as in ăr·tĭs'tic, cär·toon'; or partly accented syllables, as in är'tĭ·fĭ'cial, etc.

§ 9. The symbol ȧ is used to represent an a sound somewhat variable in quality, intermediate between ă in măn and ä in ärt, and medium or long in duration. It is used in the Vocabulary together with a reference to this section (§ 9) to identify a group of words that in this dictionary and other works indicating pronunciation have long been familiarly marked with the symbol ä. Of these words typical examples were mentioned in § 8, above, as ask, chaff, path, grass, last, chance, — words in which the vowel is followed in the same syllable by a voiceless fricative, f, th, s (but not sh), or by m or n + a consonant, and derivatives. For convenience these may be referred to as the "ask-words."

In standard speech three different pronunciations are current in these words. In southern England the long sound of ä is regular in them (äsk, chänce). This pronunciation is also used by large numbers of speakers in and near Boston, New York City, Richmond, Va., and by many individuals in the United States and Canada whose speech is influenced by that of these regions or by Southern British speech.

The sound of a (sănd), usually somewhat lengthened, is used in these words by many educated speakers in England. In the United States and Canada this ă sound is used in the words by a large majority of speakers.

A third sound, the ȧ sound mentioned above, intermediate between ă and ä, is used in these words by educated speakers of standard English in Scotland (called also Standard Scottish), though through Southern influence many are beginning to use ä, and by large numbers of educated persons in northern England. These two regions have no native ă sound, and also use the intermediate ȧ in all "short a" words (hȧt, mȧn, etc.). So they resemble the greater part of America and Canada in using one vowel for both ask-words and man-words, though the vowel is ȧ in one country and ă in the other.

In America the intermediate vowel has long been approved in dictionaries and other works for the ask-words, and large numbers of people in New England and New York City regularly so pronounce them. As the ă sound and the ȧ sound are also in use in these places for the same words, reliable information is at present lacking as to how far the intermediate vowel prevails and the extent to which its use covers the words of the group.

In the small group of words calf, half, laugh, salve (n.), aunt, can't, shan't, rather, the ä sound is more usual in Scottish standard English and Northern British English. In the United States and Canada, however, the situation is nearly the same as for the ask-words. In the country as a whole the ä sound strongly preponderates in all three groups of words.

In America the word graph and the suffix -graph are treated like ask, but derivatives like graphic, telegraphic, and the prefix grapho- regularly have ă.

Although the historical development of ä from ă took place chiefly before f, s, th, and m or n + a consonant, not all words that have these consonants after an a are pronounced with ä or ȧ. The only safe guide to the pronunciation of words like ask, half, command, etc., is actual cultivated usage.

§ 10. a as in all, talk, swarm, quar'ter, etc. — otherwise spelled as in haul, caught, draw, awe, and exceptionally in U'tah, Ar'kansas (-sô) — is equivalent to ô in ôrb, bôrn (see § 71), and the symbol ô is used in the respelling for pronunciation, however the sound may be ordinarily spelled; thus, all (ôl), talk (tôk), etc.

When a (ô) occurs in unaccented syllables it is briefer; as in aus·tere', al·though', au·thor'ity. The symbol ô is used both for the short and the long sound. The short ô is the same in quality as accented ô, higher in tongue position than ŏ in ŏdd and more lip-rounded.

§ 11. a as in was, what, wan'der, wal'low, swan, qual'i·ty, etc., is equivalent to ŏ (ŏdd, nŏt) (§ 73), and is represented in the respelling in this dictionary by ŏ; thus, was (wŏz), etc.

a as in any, Thames = ĕ, see § 28.

§ 12. ă as in chă·ot'ic, fă·tal'i·ty, vă·ca'tion, ă·sex'u·al, and numerous adjectives or nouns in -ăte, as cor'dăte, du'pli·căte, represents a sound called "half-long a," with reference to its ā-like quality, not to its quantity, or duration, which is short. This sound occurs in syllables without primary or secondary accent, with only enough accent (not usually marked) to preserve a recognizable ā quality of the vowel, as in bi·fur'cāte, adj., du'pli·cāte, adj. or n. In standard pronunciation the a in words like duplicate, graduate (n. or adj.) varies from a recognizable ā sound to ĭ. Hence the symbol ă in such cases may in practice represent a range of pronunciation from ā to ĭ. The symbol ă conveniently distinguishes adjectives and nouns like duplicate, graduate, etc., from the corresponding verbs, which have the full ā sound (du'pli·cāte, grad'u·āte, etc.). In some of the nouns or adjectives an ĭ is usual in familiar speech (dĕl'ĕ·gĭt, dū'plĭ·kĭt; see § 13).

§ 13. In many words, a in a similar situation to the a in cor'dăte, as for example in cottage, is unaccented and is regularly pronounced as ĭ; so in village (vĭl'ĭj), savage (săv'ĭj), homage (hŏm'ĭj). So -ace = ĭs, as in palace, preface, furnace; and -ate = ĭt, as in climate, prelate, separate, adj., etc. In some such endings many speakers replace ĭ with ă, as in immediate (ĭ·mē'dĭ·ăt).

ai and ay in final syllables are likewise often pronounced ĭ in some familiar words, as in always (ôl'wĭz), and regularly in the days of the week, Monday (mŭn'dĭ), etc. Saturday and yesterday are occasionally pronounced săt'ẽr·dă, yĕs'tẽr·dă, but ordinarily are săt'ẽr·dĭ, yĕs'tẽr·dĭ. But when -day has a secondary accent, it is dā' (work'day', week'day'). American pronunciation often retains ā or ă where British usually has ĭ, as in delegate.

Unaccented ia is sounded ĭ in parliament (also ȧ), marriage, and often, in colloquial speech, in miniature

§ 14. ă in unaccented initial syllables, ending in a consonant in the spelling, as in ă̆b·hor', ab·surd', ac·count', ac·crue', etc.; and in final closed syllables, as in loy'ăl, va'cant, mad'am, myr'i·ad, is more or less obscured in ordinary speech, becoming almost or quite the same as the ȧ in so'fa, i·de'a (§ 15). There is considerable variation according to the style of speech used, whether very formal or familiarly colloquial. Hence as no single symbol can exactly express each variety of sound, the symbol ă is used to suggest a variable sound between the limits of ȧ in so'fa and ă in ag'itate, tending, however, in the majority of words, and especially in familiar speech, to the neutral vowel ȧ. The symbol ă is also used in some open syllables where it is desirable to suggest a tendency toward the ă sound, as in the first a of pha·ryn'geal (fă·rĭn'jē·ăl).

Between certain consonants, articulated in the same or nearly the same place in the mouth, this ă sound may disappear entirely, as in mor'tal, Sa'tan, where in ordinary speech the final consonant usually follows immediately after the preceding one without any vowel whatever. Since in most cases, however, it is possible to pronounce the vowel, such words are often marked with both pronunciations (môr'tăl, -t'l; sā'tăn, -t'n).

§ 15. ă as in ă·bound', ca·rouse', dl'a·dem, so'fa, i·de'a, etc., occurs in open unaccented syllables, including such as the first one of a·bridge', in which two consonants begin the following syllable. In all styles of cultivated speech ă has the sound of the neutral vowel. See also § 86.

§ 16. The digraph au regularly spells the sound ô (lôrd, law), as in aught, caught, haul, etc. When followed by n (haunt, launch, laundry), it is pronounced ä by many speakers, and this is given as an alternative pronunciation in this dictionary. The words aunt and laugh are never pronounced with ô, but with ä, å, or ă (§ 9).

The digraph aw, pronounced as ô (ôrb), is now the usual form finally and before k, l, and n; as in law, hawk, lawn.

§ 17. b as in boy, cab, ebb, rob′ber, a′ble, etc., is the voiced bilabial oral stop corresponding to p, the voiceless bilabial oral stop, and to m, the voiced bilabial nasal continuant. All three are lip sounds. b is usually silent after m in the same syllable, as in bomb, climb, thumb, etc. On the other hand, a sounded b is excrescent in many words between m and l or er, as in thimble, timber. In debt, doubt, subtle, b is silent. Initial b before other consonants than l (blue), r (brig) is silent (bdellium).

In Spanish, b initially and after m or n is a lip stop, there being little or no explosive action after it. Medially, esp. between vowels, it is usually not a stop, but a bilabial fricative, a voiced sound made with the lips (but not the tongue back) shaped as for English w, and somewhat resembling English v, which is a labiodental sound. In fact, the two sounds and their spellings are sometimes interchanged, cf. Havana, Habana; Cordova, Cordoba. In this dictionary, Spanish b and v when initial or after m or n are indicated by b in the respelling, and medial b and v are transcribed as v.

§ 18. c spells three "soft" sounds and one "hard" sound: (1) The voiceless s sound before e, i, or y, as in cede, civil, cypress, force; for this sound it is respelled with s, as cit′y (sĭt′ĭ). It is sometimes written ç, when not before e, i, or y, as in façade, regularly so for pronunciation without respelling (çĭt′y). (2) The voiceless sh sound, as in vicious, ocean, oceanic, in which the c is combined with the i or e (see § 103). (3) Rarely, the voiced z sound, as in one pronunciation of sacrifice, suffice (-fīz).

§ 19. c is "hard," i. e., = k, before any letter but e, i, y, or h (see ch) and when final, as in can, cup, cry, act, arc, picnic, picnicker, exceptionally in sceptic, scirrhous. cc before e, i is pronounced ks (success, vaccinate); cc is pronounced k wherever c would be so sounded (accord, accrue).

§ 21. This digraph has four sounds in English: (1) ch, (2) j, (3) sh, (4) k. — (1) The most frequent (ch) is approximately t + sh. Though it is disputed whether ch is one or two sounds, in practice it functions as a single speech sound, as in church. It is the voiceless correlative of voiced j. In most native words ch has the sound ch, as in child, chin, much. It is also (except initially) spelled tch (satchel, catch, watch, etc.), chiefly after a short vowel; ti (question); te (righteous); and t before u (nature); see § 118.

(2) ch has been voiced to j in certain unaccented syllables. It is so regularly in the traditional pronunciation of -wich in English place names: Greenwich (grĭn′ĭj), Norwich (nŏr′ĭj). In knowledge, cabbage, partridge, the spelling has conformed to the sound. In spinach it is pronounced ch or j.

§ 22. (3) In loan words from modern French, ch has the sh sound, as in chagrin, machine, mustache, etc. In some words borrowed early, as chivalry, association with modern French has introduced sh for the historically correct ch. In champaign (level country) British still keeps the pronunciation chămpān, while in America the Frenchified pronunciation is usual (shămpān). — The sh sound of ch is indicated without respelling by çh.

§ 23. (4) ch has the "hard" sound of k in most words from Greek, either directly or through Latin, as in chorus, echo, epoch; and from Hebrew, as Chaldea, Enoch. But some that entered Anglo-Saxon, or came from Old French popular forms, have the ch sound, as church, archbishop, archduke, cherub, chart, Rachel; but k is the sound in archangel, architect, architrave. — "Hard" ch (= k) is indicated without respelling by ch.

In Italian, ch before e and i represents k. In some words from foreign languages, the corresponding ch has a fricative sound. (See § 60.)

§ 24. ch is silent in drachm, schism, yacht, fuchsia (common plant name).

§ 25. d as in day, bed, hard, robbed is the voiced tongue-point alveolar oral stop, corresponding to t, its voiceless correlative. Both are tongue-point sounds, the contact in English being on the upper teeth-ridge (alveoli).

The spelling d represents a t sound after a voiceless consonant in the same syllable, as in dropped, talked, puffed, etc. The past and past participle of dream, learn, spell are pronounced either drēmt (§ 89), lûrnt, spĕlt, or drēmd, lûrnd, spĕld. Pronunciations with d are always spelled -ed but those with t are spelled either -ed or -t.

In archaic, poetic, or solemn style, the -ed sound is often retained, as in belov′ed brethren, etc.

d is regularly silent in handkerchief, handsome, and, in informal speech, in grandfather, grandma, etc. Wednesday is ordinarily pronounced wĕnz′dĭ.

d is palatalized before i and u in words like soldier, verdure (sōl′jẽr, vûr′dūr); see § 118.

§ 26. ē as in ēve, bē, mēte, etc., is the high-front-tense vowel commonly known as "long e." This sound is formed with the tongue in nearly the same position as for ĭ (§ 52), but slightly raised and more tense, with the highest part of the tongue farthest forward and nearest the front (or hard) palate of any of the English vowels. The sound ē occurs only in syllables of some stress, as in keep′er, rēclothe′ (cf. ĕ, § 35). It is also otherwise variously represented in the ordinary spelling, as in feet, beam, de·ceive′, peo′ple, key, Cae′sar, ma·chine′, field, quay, Phoe′be.

§ 27. ę̄ in hę̄re, fę̄ar, drę̄ar′y, wę̄ird, etc., is the high-front-lax (or lowered) vowel when followed by an r sound, and corresponds nearly to ĭ when followed by an r sound. Just as the tongue position of long ā is lowered to â in câre by a following r (§ 6), so ē is lowered to ę̄ in hę̄re by the r. As with the sounds ā and â, dictionaries till recently made no distinction between ē and ę̄, though the difference between the vowels of he and here is now obvious.

The words hero, Nero, zero are pronounced either with ę̄ or with ē.

In the pronunciation of Latin words (technical terms, etc) the older ē is often retained before r, while in the Anglicized adjective the ę̄ is used.

In a few words, some speakers lower the ē as in words where r follows, as in idea and derivatives, real and derivatives, often pronounced ĭ·dę̄′ə, rę̄′əl

The vowel ę̄ is spelled as in deer, dear, drear′y, mere, bier, weird, fa·kĭr′ (fə·kę̄r′).

§ 28. ĕ as in ĕnd, pĕt, ĕr′ror, etc., is the mid-front-lax vowel, slightly lower and laxer than ā (āle), commonly called "short e" but varying considerably in actual length, as, e.g., between pĕt and sĕnd or wĕll. It is otherwise spelled in heifer, leopard, friend, Aetna, asafoetida, feather, bury, any, Thames, said, says.

§ 29. Unaccented short ĕ in initial syllables of such words as ex·cuse′, en·large′, es·teem′ varies from a recognizable ĕ sound to an ĭ sound. Obscuration toward the neutral vowel is also not infrequent among good speakers both in America and England, as ĕ·fĕkt′. In medial syllables also, where a deliberate pronunciation often shows ĕ, as in con′cĕn·trate, con′stĕl·la′tion, obscuration takes place in ordinary speech, as kŏn′stə·lā′shŭn.

§ 30. What was formerly a short ĕ also occurs in unaccented final syllables, as in stream′let, Es′sex, kind′ness, small′est, col′lege; very often in the plural or the possessive case of nouns ending in a sibilant (s, z, sh, etc.), as hors′es, match′es, Al′ice's, etc.; in the third person singular of the present tense of verbs, as push′es, urg′es, etc.; in verbs and adjectives like stat′ed, four–leg′ged, etc.; and in breth′ren, kitch′en, wom′en, wool′en (for another sound of final -en, see §§ 37 ff.). These words vary in pronunciation of the e from ĕ to ĭ. In stream′let, Es′sex the ĕ sound is often heard in deliberate or formal speech, but ĭ in more familiar speech, some speakers using ĭ in both styles. In the endings seen in kind′ness, small′est, hors′es, Al′ice's, urg′es, stat′ed, and in -en of the words given above, the sound of e in the familiar type of educated speech has long been ĭ.

Some words, however, are pronounced with the neutral vowel in the best speech, as claret (klăr′ət), diet (dī′ət); so with -e- in a medial syllable, as in piety (pī′ə·tĭ), etc.

§ 31. e in fern, err, herd, verge, er′mine, in·fer′ is identical with û in ûrn (§ 117), by which it is represented in respelling in this dictionary.

When an originally short ĕ is followed by r and a vowel, it usually retains the short ĕ sound, as in vĕr′y, pĕr′il.

§ 32. Cf. § 36. The sound ə in the unaccented syllables of mak′er, ev′er, rev′er·ent, per·form′, in′fer·ence, cav′ern — otherwise spelled as in li′ar, e·lix′ir, ac′tor, au′gur, sur·prise′, pres′sure, glam′our, zeph′yr — is the unaccented vowel corresponding to û (§ 117).

In a large number of words the unaccented sound ər is variously spelled with -ar, -er, -ir, -or, -our, -ur, -yr. The final syllables of bak′er, li′ar, sail′or, au′gur, na′dir, etc., are sounded with the same vowel ər, which is established by long usage, unaffected by the various spellings.

§ 33. e in sergeant = ä. ĕ before r final or followed by a consonant formerly often had the sound of ä (ärm). A large number of words like smart, dark, starve, darling, barn, Clark, etc., were formerly spelled with er and pronounced ər (as in mərry). In most such words the spelling has also been changed from er to ar along with the sound change from ər to är. But in some words the old spelling with er remains, as Derby, Berkeley, Berkshire, clerk, etc. In England the normal pronunciation (där′bĭ, bärk′lĭ, etc.) is still used in these words, but a recent spelling pronunciation with ûr is often substituted, esp. by those less familiar with them, — commonly so in America. Heart, hearth, hearken have a modified earlier spelling. In Clark the changed spelling has preserved the ä, while in clerk (the same word) spelling has won the day for ûr in America, and with some speakers in England. Several words have double spellings, and sometimes double pronunciations, as clerk, Clark; person, parson; Kerr, Carr; sergeant, Sargent; etc.

§ 34. e in there, where, spelled also as in their, etc. (§ 6), occurs only before r, and is identical with â in câre, by which it is represented in the respelling in this dictionary. It is indicated without respelling by ê (thêre).

§ 35. Unaccented ĕ in ĕ·vade′, crĕ·ate′, dĕ·lin′ĕ·ate, etc., is shorter than ē in ēve. This sound in formal or public speaking style is often a high but very brief ē, as in ā′thē·ĭst, but in colloquial speech, and often in formal speech, it regularly becomes indistinguishable in common words from ĭ, as in ĭllu′sion. In some familiar words the obscuration of ĕ goes even farther, to the neutral vowel ə, as in society (sō·sī′ə·tĭ), necessary (nĕs′ə·sĕr′ĭ).

§ 36. Unaccented e before r, as in mak′ər, is of the same quality as accented e in fern, but shorter and laxer. Cf. §§ 31, 32.

When ə is sounded by itself, with no r sound, it is the same sound, with slight variations, as some other unaccented vowels; as, a in sofa, e in fallen, i in terrible, etc.

Words containing the sound ẽr can be marked without respelling thus: lĭ'ẽr, elĭ'ẽr, ac'tẽr, zeph'ẽr, etc.

§ 37. ĕ as in concĕntrate, angĕl, momĕnt, quiĕt, systĕm is obscured in varying degrees in ordinary speech. In the great majority of everyday words, unaccented e before n or l, and in many words in other unaccented position, as in quiĕt, propriĕty, is obscured to the neutral vowel in colloquial speech. But as in some cases like concentrate the e may have the sound of ĕ without artificial effect, the symbol italic ĕ may indicate a sound varying from ĕ to the neutral vowel — the latter in the great majority of words. Most words in final -en have the obscure vowel, as freshĕn, faliĕn, except a few words in which it is frequently pronounced ĭn, as woolen (wo͝ol'ĭn) (§ 30), or is quite silent, as in bitten (bĭt''n) (§ 38).

§ 38. Unaccented e before n or l often disappears entirely, leaving n or l to form a syllable alone or with another consonant; as in eaten (ēt''n), garden (gär'd'n), model (mŏd''l), vessel (vĕs''l). Such syllabic consonants are indicated in Webster symbols by an apostrophe before the consonant. When the apostrophe is used, there is no vowel whatever in the syllable. In some words, however, the syllable may be pronounced either with or without a vowel, as in deafen, freshen, bushel, chapel, which are accordingly marked dĕf'ĕn, -'n; chăp'ĕl, -'l; etc. In many such cases the two pronunciations are possible where only one is given; and where both pronunciations are given for a main word, sometimes only one is given for its derivatives, though both are allowable.

§ 39. e as a consonant. When unaccented e is closely followed by another vowel having slightly more stress, there is formed a rising diphthong with a consonant y sound (or "consonantal" ĭ) as its first element. A preceding t, d, s, or z sound is often palatalized (esp. in the common words) by the y element to ch, j, or sh, as in righteous (rī'chŭs), grandeur (grăn'dj͟ŭr; colloq. -jẽr), ocean (ō'shăn). In some cases ĕ remains a syllabic vowel, as in Gideon (gĭd'ĕ·ŭn); but often either pronunciation may occur, as in hideous (hĭd'ĕ·ŭs; hĭd'yŭs), piteous (pĭt'ĕ·ŭs; pĭt'yŭs), but after w (aqueous) or a consonant + r (vitreous) the y sound is not heard (ā'kwĕ·ŭs, vĭt'rĕ·ŭs), though it may occur after r alone, as in calcareous (kăl·kâr'ĕ·ŭs; -kâr'yŭs). Cf. § 58. See § 121.

§ 40. e silent. e is frequently silent at the end of a word. Final e is now written: (1) to show the vowel long, as cāne, mēte, hōpe (cf. căn, mĕt, hŏp); (2) to show a preceding c or g "soft," as in lace, rage (cf. lac, rag); (3) to show l or r syllabic after other consonants, as in apple (ăp''l); (4) to follow certain consonants or groups that are not usually written at the end, as in live, nurse, pulse, bronze; (5) for various traditional reasons (as a former long vowel, etc.), as in one, done, fertile, etc.

The e in -ed of the past and past participles of verbs is now silent except after t or d (stated, needed, § 30), though sometimes sounded in poetry or solemn style (§ 25). It is also silent in the ending -es of verbs (goes) and of nouns (stones), except after sibilants (tosses, horses, etc.; see § 30).

§ 41. ee usually spells ē (ēve), as in see, meet, etc. Before r it is lowered to ę̄ (hę̄re), as in deer, cheer, etc. (§ 27). In been, it has been shortened to bĭn, the standard stressed and unstressed form in America. Many English speakers use stressed bēn and unstressed bĭn; others use bēn or bĭn for both. In some other words also ee has been shortened to ĭ, as in breeches, steelyards, sick, rick (formerly seek, reek), though spelling pronunciation tends to restore ē in those still spelled ee.

§ 42. ei spells ē (ēve), as in conceive, leisure; ā (āle), as in deign, rein, etc.; before r, â (câre), as in heir, their. When final, the spelling is usually ey, as in obey, they, etc. Unaccented ei, ey are sounded ĭ, as in forfeit (fôr'fĭt), sovereign, money (mŭn'ĭ). Words containing this digraph when sounded ē or ā may be marked without respelling as in de·çeive', rein.

For eu, ew, see ū.

F

§ 43. f as in fame, fly, left, cuff, etc., is the voiceless lip-teeth fricative consonant, made by forcing the breath out between the lower lip and the upper teeth. Its voiced correlative is v (vine). It is also spelled in native English words with gh, as in laugh, cough. In Greek derivatives it is spelled ph, as in phantom, photograph, telephone, etc., and, by imitation, in nephew, for older nevew, neffewe. In of the f is pronounced v.

G

This letter spells three sounds:

§ 44. (1) "Hard" g, as in gay, go, egg, the voiced tongue-back velar stop corresponding to k, its voiceless correlative, and to ng, the voiced tongue-back velar nasal continuant. All three are tongue-back velar sounds, the back of the tongue, by contact with the soft palate, or velum, closing the air passage through the mouth. For g and k the nasal passage is also closed by the raised velum, while for ng it is open.

In modern English g is "hard": (a) Always when final: beg, drug; and in derivatives from such words: begging, druggist, where g is doubled to distinguish between, e.g., ragged (răg'ĕd) and raged (rājd). (b) Before a, o, u, or a consonant in the same syllable: game, go, gun, lingual, bags (except in the British gaol, gaoler). (c) In words of Germanic origin before e and i: get, give, and in some words of doubtful origin, as boggy, and usually when doubled (muggy, buggy, lagging). (d) In a few Hebrew words, as gerah, Gideon. For gz and gzh spelled x, see under X.

"Hard" g is also spelled gh (ghost), gu (guard, guest), gue (plague). It is indicated in respelling by plain g, as in exist (ĕg·zĭst'), and without respelling by ġ (ġun).

§ 45. (2) "Soft" g = j (§ 59). g usually is soft in Latin or Romance derivatives before e, i, y: gem, engine. At the end of a word this sound is usually spelled -ge, -dge (rage, judge), at the end of a syllable also by dg (badg'er, judg'ing). Like voiceless tch, dg occurs after short vowels (edge, etc.). "Soft" g does not begin native words. It is respelled with j in this dictionary, and may be represented without respelling by ġ, as in ġem, enġine.

§ 46. (3) g as in French mirage = zh. This sound occurs in a few recent French loan words not fully Anglicized; as rouge (ro͞ozh), garage, etc.

§ 47. g is now silent before final m or n (diaphragm, sign, benign); inflectional endings do not affect it: diaphragming (-frăm'ĭng); but in such derivatives as diaphragmatic, signal, benignity, g is sounded (-frăg·măt'ĭk, sĭg'năl). It is also silent initially before n (gnat, gnaw). For g in the digraph ng, see § 68.

§ 48. gh in aghast, ghastly, ghost is a useless spelling for "hard" g (go). In other English words gh has either become silent (high, bought, caught, eight, bough) or changed to f (draught, laugh, cough, rough). In hough, gh is sounded k. In Irish lough, etc., gh is like Scottish ch.

H

§ 49. h in hate, home, behave, etc., is often called the aspirate, because it is made with a breathing sound. It is usually voiceless, but sometimes voiced when between vowels. The h sound occurs only at the beginning of syllables, and before vowels, or w, as in where (hwâr), or y, as in huge (hy͟oo͝j), never at the end of syllables or words.

In native English words at the beginning of accented syllables, even if only slightly accented, h is sounded in standard English whenever it is spelled (har'dy, be·hoove', green'house')

Words that came from Old French into English had no h sound, though the h was often spelled, as hospital, host, exhort, herb, humble, humor, hour, etc. In the 18th century there was a gradual adoption of the h sound where it was spelled in such words. The most popular of the words, however, as honest, honor, heir, hour, were in too frequent use to gain the h, and are still without it. Others still waver in general usage, as herb, hostler, homage, humble, humor, hotel. Those that lost the letter h are still without the sound, as able (OF. (h)able), ostler, arbor "bower."

The h sound has been dropped at the beginning of most unaccented syllables, as in shepherd (shĕp'ẽrd), Durham (dûr'ăm), forehead (fŏr'ĕd), vehement (vē'ĕ·mĕnt), vehicle (vē'ĭ·k'l), etc. In many such words spelling pronunciation has partly restored the h sound.

In the unstressed forms of he the h is regularly silent in ordinary speech, as in They said (h)e would; They met (h)er; I saw (h)is father; etc. At the beginning of longer words, as histor'ical, hered'itar'y, h is commonly pronounced. But usage and sentence rhythm vary, so that either a or an is written before such words: a historical, an hereditary, etc.

I

§ 50. ī as in īce, tīme, chīld, mīght'y is commonly called "long i." It is also spelled as in vie, rye, height, eye, aisle, aye "yes," sky, buy, choir. This diphthong ī varies somewhat in both its elements. The last part is often nearer to ĕ than to ĭ. The diphthong in standard American and British speech is virtually the same, with the first element like the à of àsk as sounded in New England and in many British local dialects. A form with the first element the ä in fäther is also common in both countries.

§ 51. "Long i" when not under the main accent, as in ī·de'a, bī·ol'ogy, dī·am'eter, is still a diphthong, but somewhat briefer than when fully accented.

§ 52. Accented ĭ, as in bĭt, ĭll, pĭt'y, ad·mĭt', is also spelled as in sieve, English, pretty, been (bĭn), breeches, threepence (thrĭp'ĕns), women (wĭm'ĕn), busy, build, nymph, hymnal. This sound is commonly called "short i," and is the high-front-lax vowel corresponding to the high-front-tense ē (ēve) (§ 26). The same sound occurs before r and a vowel in words like mĭr'ror, lĭr'ic.

§ 53. Unaccented ĭ occurs in such words as hab'ĭt, cab'ĭn, fam'ĭne, ĭn·tend', trag'ĭ·cal, etc. When final, its spelling is changed to -y (cop'y, hap'py) or -ey (mon'ey, hon'ey). It is represented by various other spellings, as in senate (sĕn'ĭt), cottage (kŏt'ĭj), surface (-fĭs) (§ 13), added (ăd'ĕd, ăd'ĭd), horses (hôr'sĕz, hôr'sĭz), smallest (smôl'ĕst, smôl'ĭst), mountain (moun'tĭn) (§ 30), foreign (fŏr'ĭn), circuit (sûr'kĭt), mischief (mĭs'chĭf), guinea (gĭn'ĭ), coffee (kŏf'ĭ), pigeon (pĭj'ŭn, pĭj'ĭn), always (ôl'wāz, ôl'wĭz), carriage (kăr'ĭj), etc.

The ĭ of unaccented syllables is not always identical with ĭ of accented (bĭt'ẽr). In America the tendency of final unaccented ĭ or of ĭ immediately preceding another vowel is either to remain like accented ĭ (bĭt), or to vary to a higher tongue position toward ē. Phoneticians generally, however, use the symbol ĭ (or an equivalent) for practical transcription of both accented and unaccented ĭ.

§ 54. In longer words unaccented short ĭ before an accented syllable (as'pi·ra'tion) or after it (pos'si·ble) very commonly is retracted further toward the neutral vowel (à in so'fà). But there is great variation in good usage, and since many speakers sound ĭ where others use a sound nearer to à in sofà, and since the same speaker often uses either sound in different styles of speech, an italic "short i" (i) is used in this dictionary as an intentionally ambiguous symbol indicating that both pronunciations of words so marked are in general good use in England and America. Thus the symbol i is used to mark such words as charity, vanity, possible (and other words in -ible), principle, policy, similar, animal, privilege, California, anonymous (-nĭm'ŭs), etc.; and occasionally in initial or final syllables, as in dĭvide, Apríl, etc.

In a difference so slight and so variable as this, it is difficult to represent usage exactly in every word concerned. The marking here is conservative, ĭ being used only if a pronunciation with ȧ is in unquestioned good use beside ĭ. In many words, therefore, where the symbol ĭ instead of ĭ is used, some speakers would probably pronounce ȧ. Different derivatives of the same stem are not always pronounced alike; thus many speakers who pronounce the ī in eradicate like ȧ, would pronounce it as ĭ in radical. Moreover, the words differ according to style: some words have ĭ only in very careful speech (as polĭcy), while others may have it also in colloquial speech (as edĭtor). In general, the more common words are marked with ĭ (as also certain common endings, as -ĭty, -ĭble, even in rarer words), while rarer words are usually marked with ĭ.

§ 55. ĭ silent. In certain unaccented syllables, especially in colloquial speech, ĭ often becomes silent before l or n, which thus becomes a syllable alone or with another consonant; cf. similarly silent e (§ 38). Thus in civil, devil, evil, pupil, basin, cousin, Latin, raisin, this is regular in colloquial speech (sĭv′l, ĕ′v′l, pū′p′l, etc.); and in some of them, in all styles of speech (dĕv′l, bā′s′n, kŭz′′n); and likewise when an ĭ sound is otherwise spelled, as in certain (sûr′tĭn; -t′n), garden (gär′d′n, occas. gär′dĭn); more rarely in initial syllables, as in sincere (sĭn-sēr′; s′n-sēr′). Likewise in many medial syllables, wherever the phonetic surroundings favor syllabic consonants, as in easily (ēz′ĭ-lĭ; ēz′′l-ĭ), ordinary (ôr′dĭ-nĕr′ĭ; ôr′d′n-ĕr′ĭ).

§ 56. -ile, -ile. The ending -ile in words from French or Latin is now pronounced sometimes īl and sometimes ĭl. The prevailing tendency in England is toward īl (agīle, fertīle), and in America to ĭl (agĭle, fertĭle). But there are exceptions, as gentile (n.) with īl in both countries; both ĭl and īl are heard in America in infantile, juvenile, mercantile, versatile. (Camomile, crocodile, exile, reconcile, with īl in both countries, contain a different suffix.) Some of the more familiar words lose the ĭ sound in America (see § 55), as fertile (fûr′tĭl; -t′l), futile (fū′tĭl; -t′l), hostile, etc.

-ine. The suffix -ine of adjectives and nouns, derived directly or through French from Latin -īnus and -ĭnus, is variously pronounced in English īn, ĭn, or ēn, partly according to its Latin source, partly by French analogy, partly by English rules of spelling and position of the accent, but chiefly by the analogy of familiar forms; e.g., with īn (like divīne, turpentīne), with ĭn (like genuĭne, doctrĭne), or with ēn (like marĭne). No rule without exceptions can be laid down, many words varying in pronunciation with different speakers. British English shows some tendency to īn where American has ĭn. When it is desired to represent the ē sound of ĭ, as in machine, regime, etc., without respelling, two dots may be placed over the letter: machïne, etc.

-ine, -ide. The endings -ine and -ide in chemical terms are variously pronounced. In the case of -ine, usage in America is divided between ēn and ĭn, very few American chemists using īn. The ēn pronunciation now distinctly prevails. The pronunciation īn prevails among British chemists, but is by no means the only pronunciation in use in England. In the case of -ide, especially in those words which have been long in the language, usage decidedly favors ĭd, though īd is used by many and in a few words, as amide, prevails.

In terms ending in -ine and -ide the pronunciation often varies even in the mouth of the same speaker, and this condition is especially true of teachers, who often are obliged to pronounce such words in the way that seems most likely to avoid confusion of the endings.

§ 57. Stressed ĭ before r final or followed by another consonant, as in bird, fir, vir′gin, etc., is the same sound as e in fern (fû) and û in fûrn. (Cf. § 31.) In this dictionary it is respelled û, as in stir (stûr).

Unaccented, as in na′dir, ta′pir, elix′ir, it is the same sound as ĕ in mak′ĕr, by which symbol it is respelled. Without respelling, both the stressed and unstressed sounds may be marked ĭ (stĭr, na′dĭr).

For ĭr + a vowel (miracle, mirror, etc.), see § 117.

§ 58. ĭ consonant. The consonant y sound, as in yet, may be regarded as an unaccented ĭ (or ē) sound gliding quickly into a following vowel, as in such words as Indian, which may be pronounced ĭn′dĭ-ăn, or, more rapidly, ĭn′dyăn. The increase in speed, with decrease in sonority, converts the vowel ĭ into the consonant y, and the two syllabic vowels ĭ-ă into a rising diphthong yă. Some words are, however, fairly well fixed in usage with ĭ, as serious (sēr′ĭ-ŭs), esp. where y would be hard to pronounce, as after a consonant + r, as in pedestrian (-dĕs′trĭ-ăn), or after a w sound, as in colloquial (-lō′kwĭ-ăl) (cf. § 39). Others usually have y, as opinion (ō-pĭn′yŭn), familiar (fă-mĭl′yĕr), etc. Though no exceptionless rules can be stated, there is some tendency in America to keep the syllabic ĭ (which is the older) and in England to change it to nonsyllabic y, as in audience (ô′dĭ-ĕns; ôd′yĕns); but sometimes vice versa, as in collier (Am. kŏl′ĭ-yĕr; Brit. kŏl′ĭ-ēr; -yēr). The same variation in sound between ĭ and y applies to ē in similar position, as in lineal (lĭn′ē-ăl; lĭn′yăl), etc. See § 39.

For ia in carriage, see § 13.

J

§ 59. j as in jar, jest, jute, proj′ect, etc., is an affricate, or consonantal diphthong, nearly like d + zh. These two elements blend into a composite sound in which both are somewhat changed. The sound is the voiced correlative of ch in chin (§ 21). It is also spelled with g (register, magic, clergy), ge (vengeance, page), dg (judgment, lodging), dge (judge, lodge), ch (Greenwich, § 21 (2)), di (soldier), and dj (in Oriental words, as hadj, hadji). In hallelujah, j has the sound of y, as in Latin and German. In some partly Anglicized words from French, j has its modern French sound zh, as in déjeuner (dā′zhû′nā′), etc. See also § 118.

K

§ 60. k as in kite, skill, ark, ink, oak is the voiceless tongue-back velar stop, corresponding to its voiced correlative g (§ 44), and to the voiced tongue-back nasal continuant ng (sing, § 68). All three are tongue-back velar sounds, the back of the tongue making contact with the velum, or soft palate. The k sound is also spelled as in call, account, back, biscuit (-kĭt), choir, bacchanal, acquire, liquor, queen, hough (hŏk). k is also a part of the sounds of x in tax (tăks), luxury (lŭk′shŏŏ-rĭ), except (ĕk-sĕpt′).

For excrescent k, as in strength (strĕngkth), see § 68. Initial k before n is now silent, as in know, knot, knee.

A small capital ĸ is used in the respelling in this dictionary to indicate any of certain palatal or velar fricative sounds, often wrongly called "gutturals," which occur in German, Scottish, Dutch, and other languages. These sounds are of two typical classes: a palatal (front) or velar (back) voiceless fricative. The palatal sound results from a strong current of voiceless breath between the front (hard) palate and the front of the tongue (not the point) pressed close to it. It can be approximated by placing the tip of the tongue behind the lower teeth, pressing the front part toward the front palate, and then whispering forcibly the word he. This is the sound of ch in German ich, hence called the "Ich-laut," occurring after consonants and front vowels and initially.

The velar (back) voiceless fricative is made with the back of the tongue pressed close to the roof of the mouth. It may be learned by first pronouncing the "Ich-laut" as above till it is familiar, and then passing from ĭch to ăch with similar forcible whisper and upward and backward pressure of the back part of the tongue. Another method is to begin to say lock, taking care not to let the k quite cut off the current of breath, continuing the loose k sound with a "hawking" sound. This is called the "Ach-laut," and occurs in German after back vowels, as a, o, u.

These two sounds are familiar in Scottish, the first after front vowels, as in heich "high," and the second after back vowels, as in loch. Both front and back ch sounds are indicated in the respelling by small capital ĸ, one symbol being sufficient, since the front or back sound in nearly all cases will automatically be determined by the preceding vowel.

§ 61. l as in leave, low, clay, ill, etc., is a so-called liquid consonant, formed with the tongue point on the teethridge as for t, d, n, the nasal passage being closed and voiced breath passing out at one, or more commonly both, free sides of the tongue. Hence the name lateral consonant — usually bilateral, sometimes unilateral. Being a tongue-point alveolar sound (like t, d, n), l precedes or follows any of these sounds without removal of the tongue point from the teethridge, as in salt, battle; sold, saddle; coolness, channel (chăn′l).

§ 62. "Clear l" and "dark l." In sounding l, since the sides and back of the tongue are somewhat free to assume various positions while the point remains in contact with the teethridge, there is a large range of variation in the acoustic resonance, so that this consonant may take the "color" of various vowels. The term "clear l" has been used to indicate an l sound having the resonance of a front vowel ē, ĭ, ā, ĕ, ă, ă, and "dark l" to indicate an l with the resonance of a back vowel ä, ô, ō, o͝o, o͞o, or of one of the central vowels û, ĕ, ŭ, i. e., l's formed with the tip of the tongue in the l position on the teethridge while the rest of the tongue approximates the position of one of these vowels. "Clear l" occurs before vowels (lily, loose); and "dark l" before consonants (shield), and when final (feel) or syllabic (battle).

English initial l is "clearer" than final l. But even initial l in English is not so "clear" as French l, which is "clear" in all positions, all "dark l's" having become the vowel u or having disappeared in older French. In America, sometimes initial l is noticeably "dark."

The acoustic difference between a final dark l and l preceding by the neutral vowel is not easily perceptible. Hence the difference of sound in real (rē′ăl) and reel (rēl), or in ideal (ī-dē′ăl) and deal (dēl), is not always observed in ordinary speech. Cf. also vial and vile.

In certain combinations the l, originally sounded, has regularly become silent, as in would, alms, salmon, half, talk, folk, etc.

§ 63. l often forms a syllable by itself, as in battle (băt′′l), channel (chăn′′l), trouble (trŭb′′l); or with other consonants, as in ruffled (rŭf′′ld), handled (hăn′d′ld). Some words may be pronounced with either syllabic or nonsyllabic l, as struggling (strŭg′′l-ĭng; strŭg′lĭng), awfully (ô′f′l-ĭ; ô′flĭ).

M

§ 64. m as in me, smile, lamp, drachm is the voiced lip nasal continuant, formed by bringing the lips together, as for b and p, at the same time lowering the soft palate, and thus allowing the voice to pass into or through the nasal passage. All three sounds (m, b, p) are made with closed lips, and are hence called labials.

§ 65. m may form a syllable by itself, as in the colloquial expression "Stop 'em" (stŏp′′m); or with other consonants, as in chasmed (kăzʹmd). m is, however, less commonly syllabic than n and l, and in many words in which the spelling suggests syllabic m, a vowel often actually intervenes, though not spelled, as in chasm, prism, spasm, and the numerous words like feudalism. Cf. §§ 63, 67.

N

§ 66. n as in none, knit, canny, inn, etc., is the voiced tongue-point alveolar nasal continuant corresponding to the voiced tongue-point stop d and the voiceless tongue-point stop t. All three sounds are made with the tongue point on the alveolar ridge (teethridge), and are hence sometimes called alveolar consonants, or, less accurately, dentals.

After m, a final n is silent (hymn, solemn), but before a vowel in derivatives like hymnology, solemnity, etc., the n is usually sounded (hĭm-nŏl′ŏ-jĭ, etc.). Before a consonant the n of mn is always silent, as in condemns, solemnly. Usage is divided in the participles damned, damning, the familiar pronunciation being without n; or usage is inconsistent, as in limner (lĭm′nĕr) beside condemner (kŏn-dĕm′ĕr; -dĕm′nĕr). In kiln, limekiln, the historical pronunciation kĭl is used by those familiar with kilns, but kĭln is pronounced by some others.

§ 67. n may form a syllable by itself, as in cotton (kŏt′′n), often (ôf′′n), prison (prĭz′′n); or with other consonants, as in garden (gär′d′n), pardoned (pär′d′nd).

N. A small capital ɴ is used in the respelling in this dictionary to indicate that a preceding vowel is pronounced as a nasal, as in French bon (bôɴ). The nasal passage from the throat must be open, but no n is pronounced. The tongue point makes no contact with the upper teethridge, as it must do to sound n.

§ 68. The digraph ng, as in sing, singing, represents the voiced tongue-back velar nasal continuant, corresponding to the voiced tongue-back stop g, and the voiceless tongue-back stop k. The tongue back touches the velum (soft palate) for all three sounds In sounding ng the contact of the tongue back with the velum prevents the voiced breath from issuing through the mouth, and, the velum being lowered, the sound passes out through the nose.

Though commonly represented by two letters ng, this sound is a simple nasal sound, neither n nor g nor a combination of them.

When followed by a g or a k sound, ng is also spelled with n, as in anger (ăng′gĕr), ink (ĭngk), anxious (ăngk′shŭs), uncle (ŭng′k'l), anchor (ăng′kĕr), conquer (kŏng′kĕr) It is represented by ng in respelling (fĭng′gĕr), and without respelling by n (fĭn′gĕr, ĭnk).

The letter n now invariably represents the ng sound when before a k or g sound in the same syllable. When k or g follows in the next syllable, usage varies somewhat. A few words suggest the rule that ng is sounded when its syllable is accented; as con′gress (kŏng′grĕs), con′grega′tion (kŏng′grē-gā′shŭn) beside con·gres′sional (kŏn·grĕsh′ŭn·ăl), congrat′ulate (kŏn·grăt′-), or bron′chia (brŏng′kĭ-ă) beside bronchi′tis (brŏn·kī′tĭs); but the rule has many exceptions, as con′crete (kŏn′krēt), in′crease (ĭn′krēs), or bron·chi′tis (also brŏng·kī′tĭs) In many words usage varies, as in conclave (kŏn′-; kŏng′-), con′cord, mel′anchol′y, etc.

Between ng and certain other consonants, a k or g sound is present or absent with different speakers, regardless of the spelling. Thus, k is sounded by some in anxious (ăngk′shŭs), length (lĕngkth), strength (strĕngkth), instinct (ĭn′stĭngkt), or g in anxiety (ăngg-zī′ĕ-tĭ), and by others it is omitted (ăng′shŭs, lĕngth, etc.).

§ 69. ō as in ōld, nōte, ō′ver, etc., is the so-called "long o" sound. It is also spelled as in oh, roam, foe, shoul′der, grow, owe, sew, yeo′man, beau, haut′boy, brooch. When accented, ō is usually a diphthong in standard English. It begins with the mid-back-tense vowel, a "pure" ō sound, and glides to a vowel resembling o͝o (go͝od). In the speech of South England, however, the prevailing tendency is to begin the ō sound with the tongue farther forward toward the central position.

In America the diphthongal character is less marked. Before voiceless consonants, as in note, oak, the ō is often nearly or quite pure, without the o͝o sound, or vanish. In any case, the beginning of the American sound, like that of northerly England, is a back vowel, not advanced, though sometimes slightly lowered toward ô (ôrb). The one symbol ō is here used to indicate all standard varieties

§ 70. When long ō occurs before r, it has as its vanish the neutral vowel ĕ, representing the fore-glide of the r, which is slight in America Thus the word more has the diphthong (mōĕr) (mōĕr) This applies to a large group of words that had a long ô (occasionally o͝o) in Middle English, as board, sword, court, pork, borne, coarse, course, before, door, oar, story, and many others. These are to be distinguished from another large group now pronounced with ô, as border, horse, lord, etc., which had a short ŏ in Middle English. In the prevailing speech of South England these two classes of words have fallen together, both having the sound ô. This is a recent change. In all other parts of England there are cultivated speakers who keep such words apart in sound.

In the pronunciation of America as a whole the distinction between hoarse and horse is still made naturally. It is, however, disappearing in the speech of some in America who are influenced by Southern British practice. The ō sound in hoarse is not, however, identical with that in hōpe, but it is acoustically much nearer to that of hōpe than to that of hôrse. Some speakers also use a sound midway between ō and ô for both groups of words.

§ 71. The sound of ô as in ôrb, lôrd, ôr′der is also spelled with a in all, talk, swarm; by au in fault, haul, caught; by aw in law, dawn, awful; by ou in fought, trough; by oa in broad; by ag in Magdalen (môd′lĭn); by i in memoir (mĕm′wôr); and by u in one pronunciation of sure (shôr, § 84). This vowel is described as the low-back-tense rounded vowel, which may be long, as in law, or relatively short, as in auspi′cious. But its articulation is not uniform. In South England the typical sound is made with the back of the tongue in a low (but not the lowest) position and decidedly rounded lips (nearly or quite as closely as for ō), the British sound to an American ear often suggesting (but not reaching) a pure ō. The American sound is made with less lip rounding, often very slight — only a little compression at the corners — in which case a little higher position of the tongue and jaw helps to distinguish the ô sound from the low-back unrounded ä (ärm).

The sound ô is respelled in this dictionary with ô (ôrb); when spelled with a, au, aw, it may be indicated without respelling by a (call, fault, law).

§ 72. When o is followed by final r (for, abhor), or by r and a consonant (horse, forty), its normal sound is ô when it is not ō as in fōrd (§ 70), or is not obscured by lack of stress as in actor (ăk′tĕr). When the r sound is followed by a vowel, as in moral, sorry, its regular sound is ŏ (mŏr′ăl, sŏr′ĭ) if it is not ō as in glory (glō′rĭ). But derivatives from words like abhôr (abhôrring, etc.), although the r (rr) is followed by a vowel, usually keep the ô of the stem (abhôrring, abhôrrer). In America this commonly is extended also to less immediate derivatives, such as abhôrrent, abhôrrence. But in British use and sometimes in American, these are pronounced with ŏ (abhŏrrent, abhŏrrence).

§ 73. ŏ as in nŏt, ŏdd, bŏg, dŏff, prŏp′er, prŏb′able, spelled also with (w)a as in want, wan′der, wash, watch, is commonly called "short o". As now pronounced in South England, this is a low-back-lar rounded vowel, the tongue being in the position lowest and farthest back, and the lips having "open rounding," a degree of aperture only slightly less than the open unrounded position for ä in fä′ther. Since Southern British ŏ has a higher tongue position and is much more closely lip-rounded, the sounds ŏ and ô are there quite distinctly different sounds, not the short and long of the same sound.

The ŏ sound is sometimes found in syllables with little stress, as in car′bon, can′not, ma′cron.

The rounded ŏ sound described above is not in general use in America. It is used by a considerable part of the inhabitants of eastern New England, by many in New York City, and to a considerable extent in the South. Words historically containing "short o" in general American pronunciation are mostly pronounced either with ä or with ô, not with the intermediate ŏ. Some of these variations are discussed in the following section. It is convenient to represent the "short o" by ŏ, which may thus indicate, for American pronunciation, either the true "short o" or the unrounded variety ä.

§ 74. ŏ. The following words containing a voiceless fricative (except sh), viz., off, oft, often, croft, loft, soft, soften, cough, trough; (a) cross, loss, toss, cost, frost, lost; broth, cloth, froth, are prevailingly pronounced with ô in southern England, though ŏ is also heard. In moss, moth, coffee, offer, office, officer, ô is also heard there, but ŏ prevails; while only ŏ, as a rule, is pronounced in doff, scoff, boss, dross, floss, gloss, Goth, profit, prophet, accost, Boston, gossip, gospel, hostile, possible, and most other two-syllable words of the group. In Southern British also words with au (= ô) before s (Austin, Austria, austere) are often sounded with ŏ (ŏs′tĭn, etc).

In the most general type of American pronunciation the ô sound prevails in all the one-syllable words above (except doff (rare) and Goth (cf. Gŏthic)), and also in the words coffee, offer, office, officer, Boston. But it must be remembered that American ô is not the closely rounded, ō-like vowel of British, being, in fact, not far from British ŏ. In the other two-syllable words the unrounded ŏ (= ä) prevails. But with those speakers in America who normally or frequently use a true ŏ, the latter sound is used in some or all of these words.

The variation in the sound of o in this class of words is indicated in this dictionary by the combined symbol ŏ̂, suggesting either ô or ŏ.

In another group of words having "short o" followed by an r sound (spelled r or rr), as moral, sorry, etc., usage in England is fairly uniform in the use of ŏ. In America the influence of the r (often slightly rounded) has made ŏ or ô in these words much commoner than the unrounded ŏ (ä), which is rare in these words. The more general sound in America in these is an ô of moderate length and more like ŏ than is British ô, — as in sorry, moral, forest, etc. The same tendency is seen in the wa- words, as warrant, warrior, quarrel, quârry, the most general American pronunciation being with ô, though ŏ is fairly frequent. When the r is final (war) or followed by a consonant (warm), the pronunciation is everywhere ô (wôr, wôrm), etc., just as in abhôr, hôrse.

In a group of other words with o, as bob, knob, rob, sob; God, rod; bog, dog, fog, frog, hog, log, catalogue; doll, American usage is quite variable The most frequent pronunciations are with the unrounded ŏ (bäg, näb, etc.), except in dog, log, catalogue, which more commonly have ô In all these words, the true ŏ is, of course, proper, but most American speakers to whom the true ŏ is not native are likely to pronounce ô in attempting ŏ.

In words like long, song, tongs, wrong, and in gone, British speech has ŏ, but the more general American pronunciation is lông, gône, etc. In these words the unrounded ŏ is seldom heard.

§ 75. o in ado, do, lose, move, prove, to, tomb, two, who is an occasional spelling for the o͞o sound (to͞od), which is represented in respelling in this dictionary by o͞o, or may be indicated without respelling by o͝ (do͝).

§ 76. o in wolf, woman (wo͝om′ăn), Worcester (wo͝os′tĕr), etc., is an occasional spelling for o͝o (fo͝ot), respelled in this dictionary with o͝o. It may be indicated without respelling by o͝ (wo͝lf).

§ 77. o in son (sŭn), come, dove, front, honey, London, some, tongue, won, etc., spells the ŭ sound (sŭn). In some of the rarer words the ŏ or ō sound has been adopted from the spelling (§ 3), as in cŏmbat, constable (kŭn′stă-b'l; kŏn′-), wont (wŭnt; wōnt). The ŭ sound of o may be marked without respelling by ŏ (sŏn).

§ 78. o in work, worm, worse, attorney, etc. (chiefly in native words after w), is equivalent to û in ûrn. It may be indicated without respelling by ŏ (wŏrk).

§ 79. ŏ as in the unaccented syllables of ŏ·bey′, pŏ·et′ĭc, e′gŏ·ism, etc., represents a shorter variety of ō sound, without the vanish, or o͝o sound, occurring in unaccented syllables. It is also used to represent a more obscure vowel sound, in ordinary colloquial speech becoming the neutral vowel ŭ, as in anat′ŏmy, biol′ŏgy, pŏta′to, etc.

§ 80. ŏ in cŏm·pact′, cŏn·form′ represents an unaccented sound which ranges from a full ŏ sound (stŏp) to the obscure neutral vowel in nation (nā′shŭn). It occurs in a very large number of words which in ordinary speech regularly have the neutral vowel, as in ŏccur, cŏnnect, recŏllect, etc., which are marked with ŏ to show that the ŏ sound has been obscured.

§ 81. o as in the unaccented syllables of nation (nā′shŭn), lem′on, hand′some, gal′lop, big′ot, etc., always has the obscure sound, the neutral vowel. The symbol ŭ is used in this dictionary to respell u or o when the full ŭ or ŏ sound is not a normal pronunciation. Compare the two o's in oblivion (ŏb·lĭv′ĭ·ŭn).

For o in actor = ĕ, see §§ 32, 36.

In some words o may become quite silent, being replaced by a syllabic consonant, as in button (bŭt′'n), idol (ī′d'l), pardoner (pär′d'n·ĕr); or with loss of a syllable, as in reckoning (rĕk′nĭng), chocolate (chŏk′lĭt).

§ 82. oi in oil, boil, etc., is a diphthong consisting of ô + ĭ, the elements being pronounced in a single wave of sound (ôĭ). It is used in the respelling always with this value.

oi sometimes represents other sounds, as in cham′ois, choir.

oy regularly has the sound of oi as in oil. The sound of oi when final is commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by oy, as in boy (boi), and sometimes when medial, as in royal (roi′ăl).

§ 83. oo in modern English represents most commonly the sounds o͝o in fo͝od and o͝o in fo͝ot, by which these sounds, however spelled, are represented in the respelling. The letters oo also spell the sounds of ŭ in flood, blood, and ō in door, floor, brooch.

o͝o as in fo͝od, fo͝ol, no͝on, pro͝of — otherwise spelled as in rude (§ 114), group, drew, fruit, do, canoe, rheum, maneuver, blue — is the high-back-tense rounded vowel Sometimes, esp. in South England, it is slightly diphthongal, beginning a trifle more open and ending closer.

§ 84. Before r (moor, poor, tour, sure) the o͝o sound is somewhat lowered by the r so as to become nearly or quite o͝o (mo͝or, po͝or, to͝or, sho͝or). Cf. the lowering effect of r in hĕre, câre. The same lowering effect is also seen in the last part of the diphthongal sound spelled with long ū = yo͝o before r. Words like endūre′, Eu′rope, secū′rity (§ 114) are commonly pronounced ĕn-dyo͝or′ (-do͝or′), yo͝or′ŭp, sĕ-kyo͝or′ĭ-tĭ. In Southern British speech words like poor, sure, etc , are pronounced either pōr, shōr, or pôr, shôr

§ 85. The sound o͝o, as in fo͝ot, bo͝ok, co͝ok, cro͝ok, etc., also spelled as in full (fo͝ol), wolf (wo͝olf), would (wo͝od), is the high-back-lax rounded vowel, with tongue slightly lower and less tense than for o͝o and lips less closely rounded.

The pronunciation with o͝o is well agreed on in the words bo͝ok, bro͝ok, co͝ok, cro͝ok, fo͝ot, go͝od, ho͝od, ho͝ok, lo͝ok, no͝ok, ro͝ok, sho͝ok, sto͝od, to͝ok, wo͝od, wo͝ol.

In the following words, cultivated usage is divided between o͝o and o͞o: broom, coop, groom, hoof, hoop, pooh, roof, room, root, snook, soon, soot, spoon, whoop, whooping cough.

§ 86. ou is the regular spelling for the diphthong in out. The ou sound in standard British and American is a diphthong beginning with ä (äsk) and ending with (or near) o͝o, sometimes about ŏ.

Other sounds represented by the letters ou in English are: ō (soul), o͝o (soup), o͝o (should), ô (bought), ŭ (double), ŏ (hough), û (journey); and unaccented, ŭ (grievous), ŏ (borough), ē (glamour).

ow

§ 87. When final, the diphthong ou is usually spelled ow (cow, now), sometimes also medially (scowl, howl). Likewise when ou is sounded ō (soul) it is spelled ow finally (know, tow) and sometimes medially (bowl). Unaccented at the end of such words as sparrow, follow, etc., the generally accepted pronunciation is ō (ĭŏl′ō, etc.).

For oy, see oi (§ 82).

§ 88. p as in pay, play, happy, cup, etc., is the voiceless lip stop, corresponding to the voiced lip stop b (§ 17), and the voiced nasal lip continuant m (§ 64). All three sounds are made with closed lips.

p is silent in raspberry (răz′bĕr′ĭ), cupboard, receipt, corps; and also in the commoner Greek derivatives psalm (säm), psalter, pneumatic, pneumonia, etc. In less common words, as pseudo-, Psyche, pterodactyl, etc., some pronounce the p.

§ 89. The p sound is often excrescent, as in Thompson, glimpse, etc. The same excrescent sound often occurs when it is not spelled, as in warmth (wôrmpth), dreamt, comfort, triumph, though usage varies in this, as it does also when the letter p is spelled, as in em(p)ty, glim(p)se, jum(p)ed, sem(p)stress, etc.

§ 90. ph as in phantom, etc., usually spells the f sound (far), chiefly in Greek derivatives, as phantom, sylph, philosophy, etc. Exceptionally, it has the sound v, as in Stephen, and in nephew as pronounced by some. In diphthong, triphthong, diphtheria, naphtha, etc., ph is often sounded p, but f is usual. Initially before th (phthalin) ph is more often silent: thăl′ĭn; fthăl′ĭn.

Q

§ 91. q is regularly followed by u, with the sound of kw in native words, as quell, quake. In loan words qu is also usually kw (quite, conquest), but is sometimes k, as in liquor (lĭk′ẽr), coquette (kō-kĕt′). Final -que is sounded k, as in unique (ū-nēk′).

R

§ 92. The letter r in rate, very, far, feared, hurt, better, etc., spells a variety of sounds, the chief of which are described here.

(1) Description of r. (1) The original English r, at least before vowels, was a tongue-point trill. The audible sound consists both of voice and the tongue-point vibrations.

(2) Uvular r (velar r, less properly, guttural r) is made by the combined sound of voice and rapid vibrations of the uvula against the back of the tongue raised toward the velum, or soft palate.

(3) Fricative r is made with the tongue raised to a position similar to that for the tongue-point trill, but with the point not vibrating. The point is close enough to the front palate to cause audible friction of the voiced breath between.

(4) Frictionless continuant r is formed by a tongue position much like that of fricative r, but with the tongue sufficiently withdrawn from the front palate to eliminate the fricative sound. Though similar in tongue position to fricative r, the difference is fundamental, no sound but voice being heard. It is vowellike in sound.

(5) Retroflex r is a further modification of the fricative and frictionless r, in that the tongue point is further turned up toward the hard palate, in some cases being bent back, or "retroflexed." Here, too, there is no sound but voice. Organically, (4) and (5) are characterized by a gliding movement of the tongue to or from a vowel.

(6) If the tongue be held in the position for (4) or (5) and the voice sounded without change of tongue position, an "r-colored" vowel will result. This is the vowel û (stressed) and ẽ (unstressed) of general American pronunciation.

§ 93. (II) Occurrence of r. (1) Trilled r is still used by Scottish speakers of standard English, though not invariably in all positions of the word. It is also occasionally pronounced between vowels by Englishmen, usually with a single flip of the tongue. The trilled r is still common with Welsh speakers of English and in Irish and Scotch dialect. The point-trilled r is regular in German standard speech, and is common in some types of French. It is also regular in Welsh, Italian, and Spanish.

(2) Uvular r is found in English chiefly in Northumbrian dialect, but not at all in standard English. The uvular trill, or a strong fricative ("uvular scrape") articulated at the same point, is regular for Parisian standard French, and is also common in Germany.

(3) Fricative or (4) Frictionless continuant r is the usual one in standard Southern British. In so-called fricative r, the fricative element is often a minor one

(5) Some degree of retroflex r is common with educated speakers in northern, western, and southwestern England, and is regular in the greater part of America and Canada. In regions where r is sounded finally and before consonants, retroflex r often affects the quality of a preceding vowel. In the most general type of educated American speech the r coincides with the vowel û (hûrt) and with the corresponding unstressed vowel ẽ (pẽrceive); i. e , the vowel is pronounced for its whole duration with the tongue in the raised position for r — the so-called retroflex, or "r-colored," vowel, no further consonant r being added. This is the only vowel in standard American English so affected.

Loss of r In the standard speech of southern England, of eastern New England, of New York City, of most of the southern United States, and of some speakers in the cities of Canada (esp eastern), r is sounded only before a vowel in the same or a closely following word, the letter r being retained in the spelling. The following will illustrate. fear (fi͟ẽ), are (ä), arm (ärm), form (fôẽm, fôm), bore (bōō), far away (fär ȧwā′), here and there (hi͟ẽr ȧn thâr), here they are (hi͟ẽ thā är). When an r sound is thus retained before a vowel of the next word, it is called linking r.

§ 94. As a result of sounding r only before a vowel, many words, spelled with final r, exist in two forms but in one spelling, as seen in here I am (hi͟ẽr ī ăm), here they are (hi͟ẽ thā är), according as a vowel follows or not. Hence any word that ends in ẽ (as does (hi͟ẽ)), such as idea (ī-dē′ȧ), etc , is likely to be treated like those that end in r, and hence to take an r sound when a vowel follows. Thus the speaker says, a good idea (ȧ go͝od ī-dē′ȧ), but the idea of it (thi͟ẽ ī-dē′ẽr ŏv ĭt). This is called intrusive r, and is common in England and eastern America, less so in the southern United States

§ 95. Since speakers of some types of standard speech pronounce r where others do not, in this dictionary all r's are marked in the respelling for pronunciation as being pronounced, with the understanding that those who omit r except before vowels will in these cases pronounce it or omit it just as they would when it appears in the ordinary spelling.

§ 96. The letter s spells four different sounds, two voiceless and two voiced; viz.: (1) s as in sun (sŭn), (2) z as in easy (ēz′ĭ), (3) sh as in sure (sho͝or), and (4) zh as in vision (vĭzh′ŭn).

§ 97. (1) The usual method of forming English s as in sun is with the tip and blade of the tongue pressed close to the upper teethridge, and the point drawn into itself so as to form a very narrow, tubelike channel between the tip and the teethridge. A thread of voiceless breath forced through this channel strikes the points of the teeth (esp the lower) and produces the characteristic "hissing" sound. It cannot be made with the mouth wide open, since the air stream does not then strike the lower teeth. Some speakers place the tip of the tongue behind the lower teeth, pressing the front of the tongue toward the teethridge to form the channel.

Voiceless s is heard in see, so, small, basis, yes, hats, etc. It is otherwise spelled as in pass, cell, rice, scene, schism, tax, quartz. It is silent in aisle, isle, island, Carlisle, corps (kōr), chamois, rendezvous, debris, viscount, demesne, apropos, Grosvenor, and with varying frequency in bas-relief, Arkansas, Illinois, St. Louis, Louisville.

§ 98. (2) Voiced s has the sound of z and is formed like voiceless s with the addition of voice. It is heard in easy, resolve, has, is, ribs. (Initial s does not spell z) This sound of s is respelled in this dictionary with z, as in ribs (rĭbz), and may be indicated without respelling by s̱ (rĭbs̱).

Two principal sources of voiced s (originally always voiceless) are: (a) Lack of stress, as in the unaccented syllables of words like Mary's (mâr′ĭz), roses, etc., or in the frequently unstressed words is, was, has, etc. (b) Voice assimilation between voiced sounds, as in observe, pansy, easy; also in refuse, lose, etc., where final e was once sounded, and hence s was between vowels.

In certain nouns and adjectives spelled in the same way, the s sound was originally final, as it still is, as abuse (n), loose (adj.). Hence some pairs of verbs and nouns or adjectives are distinguished by the sound of z or s, however spelled, as close: v. (klōz), adj. (klōs) — house: v. (houz), n. (hous) — use: v (ūz), n. (ūs); etc.

§ 99. The ending -s or -es in the plural of nouns (ships, bushes), or in the possessive case (Jack's, George's), or in verbs (eats, goes), is pronounced according to the preceding sound. After voiceless sounds except sibilants (s, sh, ch) it is pronounced s; as in ships, Ruth's, takes. After voiced sounds except sibilants (z, zh, j) it is pronounced z; as in ribs, trees, Tom's, Joe's; digs, goes. After sibilants, voiced or voiceless, it is pronounced ĕz, ĭz (§ 30); as in losses (lŏs′ĕz), roses (rōz′ĕz); Grace's (grās′ĭz), thrush's (thrŭsh′ĭz); ceases (sēs′ĕz), gazes (gāz′ĕz).

§ 100. (3) s has the sh sound when it is palatalized by a following ĭ or y sound (however spelled), as in mansion (măn′shŭn), censure (sĕn′shẽr), nauseous (nô′shŭs). See § 103.

§ 101. (4) Likewise voiced s (= z) has the sound zh when palatalized by a following ĭ or y sound, as in vision (vĭzh′ŭn), measure (mĕzh′ẽr). See further in § 103.

§ 102. sh as in sharp, rashly, bush, etc., is pronounced with the tip and blade of the tongue approaching the hard palate a little farther back than for s. The aperture is wider laterally, so that the current of air passing over the tongue is more spread out like a waterfall than for s, in which it is like a jet. The main body of the tongue is also higher toward the roof of the mouth. The broader stream of air rushes against the teeth much as for s, the mouth requiring to be nearly closed. The position of the tongue is on the whole similar to that for y, hence sh and its voiced correlative zh are often called palatal sounds, and are, in fact, often the result of palatalization (§ 103).

The sound spelled sh is not a combination of s and h, contains no s or h sound, and is a simple sound. It does often result from pronouncing s next to a y sound, but when it becomes sh it ceases to be either s or y and becomes a different, simple sound. It is now also spelled as in machine, chandelier, schist (shĭst), issue, mission, conscience, special, anxious. See § 103.

When s and h are in separate syllables, each has its own sound, as in sheepshead (shēps′hĕd′). In some names, ignorance has led to a wrong division and pronunciation that have come into good use, as in Lewisham (= Lewis + ham), often pronounced lū′ĭsh-ăm for the historically correct lū′ĭs-ăm.

§ 103. The words issue, mission, conscience, etc., mentioned above (§ 102), contain instances of palatalization of s to sh. The condition for this is a consonant y sound following the s, and followed by an unstressed or lightly stressed vowel. In words like conscience, special, nauseous, etc., this y sound was earlier an unaccented ĭ or ē sound (still so spelled), which by lack of stress became a y sound, just as unaccented ĭ in Indian (ĭn′dĭ-ăn), may become y (ĭn′dyăn), as explained in § 58. The sound s is thus, as the tongue anticipates the position for (palatal) y, transformed into the palatalized sh sound (cf. § 102, first ¶). Regardless of the spelling, when these combinations of sound occur, the palatalization takes place, as in anxious (x = ks), nauseous. So, too, before ū, as in issue, though the y sound is not spelled at all, it is yet a part of the pronunciation of ū, and the palatalization takes place as usual: ĭsh′ū, ĭsh′o͝o. The corresponding palatalization also takes place when the first sound is voiced s (z), which is changed to zh, the voiced correlative of sh; as in vision (vĭzh′ŭn), etc.

In some words, after the ĭ or ē has become y and been absorbed into the sh or zh sound (mission, vision), it has sometimes been restored, as seen in Asia (ā′zhă) but Asiatic (ā′zhĭ-ăt′ĭk), etc. This is partly due to analogy, partly to spelling, and no doubt partly to the rhythm of utterance. Thus the rhythm of ā′zhăt′ĭk is a trifle difficult, owing to the adjacent accent, so that the more natural alternating rhythm is apt to be substituted (or kept from the beginning): ā′zhĭ-ăt′ĭk.

§ 104. t as in tie, note, apt, matter, etc. — also spelled as in Thomas, walked, or without spelling in eighth (ātth) — is the voiceless tongue-point alveolar stop, corresponding to the voiced tongue-point alveolar stop d, and to the voiced tongue-point alveolar nasal continuant n. All three are made with the tongue point on the upper teeth-ridge, as also is l. See § 25.

t in words like question is palatalized to ch as d in soldier is to j. See §§ 103, 118.

§ 105. t is silent in Matthew, mortgage, hautboy, chasten, listen, castle, soften, etc.; and commonly in combinations like sit down, must go — esp. when between two consonants.

§ 106. An excrescent t is pronounced in against (formerly agains), amongst (formerly amongs), midst, pennant.

§ 107. th spells the tongue-point dental (or interdental) fricative, voiceless, as in thin, ether, tooth, or voiced, as in this, either, smooth, the symbol th being used in this dictionary for the voiceless, and t͟h for the voiced sound. In forming th, t͟h, the point of the tongue lightly touches the backs or the points of the upper teeth, in some cases protruding a trifle between upper and lower teeth, while breath hisses through with a fricative sound — the only sound when th is voiceless, and combined with voice when it is voiced (t͟his).

When spelled with final th, the sound is usually voiceless (except in bequeath, booth, mouth, v., smooth, with); when final and voiced, it is usually spelled -the (bat͟he).

The th sound is a simple sound, made with a single tongue position, not a combination of t and h sounds.

§ 108. Certain nouns ending in th have th in the singular (mouth) and thz in the plural (mouthz), etc. After a short vowel, there is a tendency to voiceless th, as in the plurals breaths, deaths, etc., and likewise after consonants, as in breadths, months, etc. But the usage is divided in some words, as in truths (tro͞othz; -ths), youths, etc.; and some words with long vowel regularly have voiceless -ths, as heaths, growths. In cloths, a modern formation, some speakers distinguish clo͞thz "pieces of cloth" from clo͞ths "kinds of cloth."

Initial th in pronominal words (the, this, then, there, etc.) is now voiced (t͟his, etc.). In the word with usage is divided, the voiceless form being especially apt to occur before voiceless consonants (with certainty, with feeling, etc.).

§ 109. The th is voiced in several verbs, as bathe, loathe, teethe, in which the final -e was once sounded. It is likewise voiced in the verbs bequeath, mouth, smooth, though the -e is no longer written. Thus the voiced t͟h constitutes a distinction between nouns or adjectives and verbs: as bath, bat͟he; mouth, mouth.

§ 110. th has the sound of t in thyme, Thomas, Esther.

When t and h are in separate syllables, each has its own sound, as in nut′hatch. Through ignorance or reverence for the spelling, a th sound has become standard in some such words: as Waltham (wôl′thăm; Brit. wôl′tăm, -thăm).

§ 111. ti in nation, patience, martial, etc., has the sound of sh (shine). In bestial (bĕs′chăl), etc., ti has a ch sound.

U

§ 112. ū as in ūse, lūte, dis-pūte, etc., is commonly called "long u." It is otherwise spelled as in beauty, feud, pew, queue, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, yew, you. The sound marked ū is chiefly used in syllables having a full stress (cūbe), or a subordinate accent, whether marked or not, as in in′ter-view′er (ĭn′tẽr-vū′ẽr), per′fūme. When quite unaccented, a different symbol (ŭ) is used (§ 118).

§ 113. The sound of ū varies both with different speakers and according to neighboring sounds. The main element of ū is the sound o͞o (fo͞od), commonly with slightly forward tongue position. Preceding this is usually the sound of y (yes), or a more vowel-like sound ĭ (ĭlĭ), the tongue being somewhat retracted. After certain sounds, the initial element is much lightened or absent, leaving only o͞o (See § 114.)

§ 114. The ū sound, however spelled, varies in cultivated speech according to the phonetic nature of the preceding sound. The same condition, with some modifications, also affects the unaccented ū (§ 118).

(1) When the ū sound is initial, the y sound is always fully heard in all types of cultivated English, as in use (ūz), union (ūn′yŭn), ewe (ū), eulogy (ū′lŏ-jĭ), the y is written in the phonetically identical sound in yew (yo͞o), yule (yo͞ol), youth (yo͞oth). y is also sounded whenever unaccented ū is initial, as in ūtility, etc.

(2) After b (beauty), c (cube), f (few), g (gew′gaw), h (human), k (Kew), m (mute), p (pure), v (view), the sound ū is regular, and o͞o is not used. Thus there is no confusion between pairs like beauty–booty; cue–coo; feud–food; hew–who; etc.

(3) After s (assume), z (resume), th (enthusiast) — tongue-point fricatives — though the same pronunciations as in (2) are in accepted use, cultivated speakers in both England and America often suppress the first element of the ū, leaving o͞o alone. (ă-so͞om′, etc.). This is often criticized, but is in widespread use.

(4) After d (duty), t (tune), n (new) — tongue-point stops and nasal — the ū sounds are also accepted generally, but here too in America, at least, the o͞o sound is widely used by the educated. It is to be observed, however, that the o͞o in these words is formed with the tongue farther forward, and that suit, duty, thus pronounced, are not accurately represented by the spellings "soot" and "dooty," and do not exactly rhyme with shoot, booty.

(5) After l (lute) usage is divided both in England and in America, the pronunciations lūte and lo͞ot both being in good use. However, when another consonant precedes the l in the same syllable, as in blue, blew, in-clude′, etc., the o͞o sound is regular. But if the consonant is in the preceding syllable, as in ab-lu′tion, the pronunciation is like that of lūte. Thus in the word flu′ent, the marking is flo͞o-, while in af′flu-ent, it is ăf′lū-ĕnt.

(6) After ch (chew) and j (June) the first element of ū is likewise usually omitted (cho͞o, jo͞on). But after the palatalized sounds ch and j there is apt to be a noticeable ĭ glide to the following vowel, and the pronunciations often resemble (chŭ, jŭn).

Likewise after the simple sounds sh and zh, as in sure, usu′rious, the y element usually disappeared when sh or zh was palatalized from s or z. But ū is sometimes heard, as in usu′rious (ū-zhŏo͝r′ĭ-ŭs, ū-zhū′rĭ-ŭs); and when unaccented, in issue (ĭsh′ū, ĭsh′o͝o).

(7) After r the y element is now completely silent in standard speech, as in rule (ro͞ol), brew (bro͞o), crew, prune, true, threw, etc. But the o͞o with tongue forward is still common in these words, though they are regularly marked with o͞o in the respelling in this dictionary (or without respelling, may be indicated by u̇, as in rule). By this advanced o͞o, often also with prefixed retracted ĭ, many Americans preserve the historical distinction in sound between rude and rood, rheum–room, threw–through, chews–choose, lute–loot, etc.

(8) When ū occurs before r, the o͞o element of the ū sound is commonly lowered to o͝o just as is the simple o͞o sound, in such words as Europe, fury, bureau, mural, cure, mature, endure. Attention is often called to it in the Vocabulary by a reference to this section or to § 84. Thus a common pronunciation of the foregoing words is: yo͝or′ŭp, fyo͝or′ĭ, byo͝or′ō, etc. The lowered sound o͝o is especially evident after those consonants where the first (y-) element is sometimes omitted, as in sure (sho͝or), rural (ro͝or′ăl), jury (jo͝or′ĭ).

Just as there is a tendency in Southern British speech to change o͝o before r into ō or ô, likewise the second element of ū (yo͞o) in pure, endure, etc., varies to ō or ô (pyo͝or, pyōr, pyôr; ĕn-dyo͝or′, ĕn-dyōr′, ĕn-dyôr′; etc.).

§ 115. u as in pull, bull, push, etc. — otherwise spelled as in wolf, wood, woman — has the sound of o͝o in foot (§ 85), being respelled in this dictionary with o͝o (§ 76). It may be represented without respelling by u̇ (pu̇ll) or o (wolf). This is the high-back-lax rounded vowel made with the back of the tongue raised toward the velum, and with lips rounded a little less than for o͞o. The same sound of u is heard in sure and in sugar.

§ 116. ŭ as in sŭn, ŭn′der, ŭn-do′ — otherwise spelled as in son, in′come, does, flood, dou′ble, two′pence (tŭp′ĕns) — is the "short u" sound. For the frequent spelling with o (dove, won, done), see § 77. As pronounced generally in America, this is a central unrounded vowel, the highest part of the tongue being a little lower and farther back than for the ă in sofă or ē in bettẽr.

§ 117. û as in ûrn, hûrt, hûrl is the vowel already mentioned in § 31, being the accented form corresponding to unaccented ẽ (§ 32). It is a central vowel, made with the tongue intermediate in position between front and back, although it varies somewhat with different speakers and when it occurs in different positions. The sound û is otherwise spelled in fern, err, heard, sir, word, journal, myrrh.

The sound û occurs also in syllables with only a slight accent, often not marked, as in bûr-lesque′. There is often a choice between û and ẽ according to speed of utterance or difference of usage (bûr-lĕsk′, bẽr-). Wherever û is frequently heard in such lightly accented syllables, they are marked with the symbol û, it being understood that, when entirely unaccented, the sound changes, without a sharp dividing line, to ẽ.

When û, or its equivalent, is followed by r or rr and a vowel, as in hurry, courage, worry, usage is divided as to the sound of the vowel. The earlier sound in such words corresponded to the present û, and this is preserved as the usual pronunciation in America. But in the prevailing speech of England this sound has become ŭ, often somewhat modified by the following r so as to differ somewhat from ŭ in sŭn, come, etc. An intermediate type is also heard in America, acoustically between û and ŭ, but û is also common even with those speakers whose speech in some respects resembles British, esp. in the Southern States.

When words like fûr, cûr, stir, err, etc., take a vowel suffix, as in furry, erring, etc., they retain the û of the stem. The word erring is also sometimes pronounced ĕr'ĭng — esp. in unerring — both probably influenced by ĕrror, ĕrrant, but ûr'ĭng is more usual.

The symbol û is also used in this dictionary to respell French words like jeu, having the mid-front rounded vowel, and jeune, having the low-front rounded vowel; or German words like schön, with mid-front rounded vowel, or können, with low-front rounded vowel. The tongue for these sounds is somewhat farther forward than for English û, which is usually not rounded.

§ 118. ŭ as in ŭnite, insŭlar, natŭre, verdŭre, etc., represents a modification of ū (§§ 112–114) in unaccented syllables. The sound ŭ differs from ū in taking as its second element either the lower o͝o, or a briefer form of o͝o, the same word often varying between a brief o͝o or o͞o according to conditions of speed, sense stress, or sentence rhythm.

The treatment of the first element of ŭ is much like that of accented ū, according to the preceding consonants. When initial, the y sound is invariably heard, as in ŭnite, ŭsurp, eugenic, etc. After s, y is sometimes lost, as in sŭpreme, often (so͞o·prēm'), etc. In familiar speech the vowel is often obscured to (ŭ) — (sŭ·prēm', etc.). After ch (virtuous (vûr'tŭ·ŭs)), j (judicious (jo͞o·dĭsh'ŭs)), sh (sexual (sĕk'sho͞o·ăl)), zh (visual (vĭzh'ŭ·ăl)), the y is often lost; but, as in accented syllables, there is some wavering. After r (prudential (pro͞o·dĕn'shăl)), and a consonant + l, the y is regularly lost. In unaccented syllables, however, the preceding consonant often belongs phonetically to the syllable before the ŭ, as in val'ŭ·a'tion, with the result that the ŭ is phonetically initial, and thus takes a clear y sound (as above): (văl'ŭ·ā'shŭn). Compare re·pūte' with rep'ŭ·ta'tion, sa·lūte' with sal'ŭ·ta'tion. With these compare al'fluence (ăl'lŭ·ĕns), in which the first element of ŭ is much less like y. Likewise after r in a preceding syllable the y sound is often clear, as in one pronunciation of erudite (ĕr'ŭ·dīt), garrulous (găr'ŭ·lŭs). So with partly accented ŭ in Matthew (măth'ū), with clear y sound.

For the difference between flu'ent (flo͞o'ĕnt) and af'fluent, see § 114 (5).

So far as the second element of the unaccented ŭ is not already lowered to o͝o by lack of stress, it undergoes the same lowering effect of a following r that is seen in accented ū (endūre'), or in simple o͞o (po͞or); as in ŭranium, dŭration, etc. See §§ 84, 114 (8).

Before u in words like censure the s sound is palatalized to sh, and in words like measure the z sound is palatalized to zh, the s and z combining with the initial y element of the u. In the common words of this sort the u is reduced in ordinary speech to ĕ when before r, as in censure (sĕn'shĕr), measure (mĕzh'ĕr). Other examples are sensuous (sĕn'sho͞o·ŭs), visual (vĭzh'ŭ·ăl; -o͞o·ăl). Initial s is not thus palatalized, however, as in supreme (sŭ·prēm'; sŭ·prēm'), superior, etc., and occasionally when medial, as in consular (kŏn'·sŭ·lĕr; kŏn'sŭ·lĕr, the first element of ŭ being weakened or lost).

In words like nature, verdure, the off-glide of the t or d combines with the first element of ŭ to form a sound that varies from ty or dy to a completely palatalized ch or j. The last is the natural pronunciation in general use by unaffected speakers in all the common words. This palatalization is indicated in the pronunciation by the tie bar t͡ŭ, d͡ŭ.

This palatalization also takes place before the partly accented ū, as in virtue (vûr'tū, vûr'cho͞o), etc. But before fully accented tū, dū, it does not occur in standard speech (tūne, dūty, etc.).

§ 119. ŭ in the unaccented syllables of circŭs, datŭm, sŭbmit, circŭmstance — otherwise spelled as in porpoise (pôr'pŭs), pious, dungeon, righteous, gracious, atom, irksome, nation, etc. — represents the obscuration of a u or an o sound to the stage of the neutral vowel, the usual italic letter indicating the obscuration.

§ 120. A silent u occurs after g, as in guard, guess, rogue, etc. In these cases u does not form a digraph with a following vowel, but is a mere sign of "hard" g.

In the common adjective ending -ful (awful, careful, etc.), the u is regularly silent in familiar speech, the l thus becoming syllabic (ô'f'l, kâr'f'l). The noun ending -ful, as in cuptul, etc., is pronounced with the vowel o͝o.

§ 121. u with consonant value. The letter u is an equivalent spelling for w, esp. after q (= k) or g (quality, quite, language, etc.); occasionally elsewhere, as in persuade, suave, suite.

§ 122. ü as in French menu (mĕ·nü'), German grün, etc., occurs only in foreign loan words not yet naturalized. The French sound may be imitated by firmly rounding the lips as if to pronounce o͞o (mo͞on), and then, while holding the lips in this position, pronouncing ē (ēve). The German sound is in some words the same as the French, in others it is approximately ĭ (ill) pronounced with somewhat less rounding of the lips.

§ 123. v as in vain, vivid, ever, live, valve, wolves — spelled ph in Stephen (also Steven), nephew (nĕf'ū; nĕv'ū), and f in of (ŏv) — is the voiced lip-teeth fricative consonant corresponding to voiceless f (§ 43).

v in Spanish is like Spanish b in pronunciation. See § 17.

W

§ 124. w as in we, worse, dwarf, twice — spelled also u (persuade, queen), o (memoir (mĕm'wär), choir (kwīr)) — is a combined lip and tongue sound, the lips being rounded and the tongue back raised as for o͞o or o͞o. It may be regarded as a gliding sound, made while the lips and tongue are moving toward the position of the following vowel. It is classed as a semivowel.

§ 125. The consonant w sound occurs only before vowels. It is now silent before r (write, wren, etc.). The letter is often written finally, as in snow, know, and now. In snow it is not needed, for ō alone spells the same sound, as in go. In now, however, w is essential, representing the second element of the diphthong ou in out. Omission of w would change now to nō. The group aw(e) is the final form for the spelling au.

§ 126. Besides being silent before r (write), w is also silent before vowels in two classes of instances: (1) When not initial, w coalesced with its closely related o͞o or o͞o sound, as in two (to͞o, formerly tho͞o), who (ho͞o, formerly hwo͞o), sword (sōrd, formerly swōrd). Initially w remains before o͞o, as in wound (wo͞ond; wound), woo, womb, etc. (2) Before the vowels of unaccented syllables or unstressed words w regularly disappeared, as in answer (ăn'sĕr), toward (tōrd), boatswain (bō's'n), I'll go (from I' will go'), and the endings -wĭch and -wĭck of place names — Woolwich (wo͝ol'ĭj), Warwick (wŏr'ĭk). Many such silent w's have been restored by spelling pronunciation. In one, once, w is sounded but not spelled

§ 127. wh as in which, when, whale, etc., represents either h + w or a voiceless w sound. Voiceless w and hw sound very much alike. The symbol hw is commonly used for either sound.

w for hw is now usual in standard Southern British speech. In Scotland, in Ireland, in North England, and in America, hw is the usual pronunciation, though the w sound appears to be spreading in America

X

§ 128. The letter x spells six sounds in English: (1) ks, as in box, exclaim', etc.; (2) gz, as in exact', exist', exag'gerate, etc.; (3) ksh, as in an'xious (ăngk'shŭs), lux'ury (lŭk'shŏo·rĭ); (4) gzh, as in luxu'rious (lŭg·zho͝or'ĭ·ŭs); (5) z, in anxi'ety (ăng·zī'ĕ·tĭ) and initially in Greek derivatives, as xy'lophone (zī'lō·), etc.; (6) sh, as in one pronunciation of anx'ious (ăng'shŭs). In except' (ĕk·sĕpt'), exscind' (ĕk·sĭnd'), the s element of x has merged with the s sound of the c, or sc. In (3), (4), and (6) the s or z element of x has been palatalized by the following ĭ, or by the y element of ŭ or û (§ 103).

It will be seen in the above examples that when x immediately follows an accented vowel (ex'it, lux'ury), or is followed by a consonant sound (exclaim'), it is voiceless (ks, ksh, sh); when it immediately follows an unaccented vowel (exact', exhort', luxu'rious, anxi'ety), it is voiced (gz, gzh, z).

But the analogy of differently accented forms of related words disturbs this natural phonetic tendency; thus luxu'rious is also pronounced lŭk·sho͝or'ĭ·ŭs, by analogy of lux'ury; and conversely, lux'ury is sometimes lŭg'zho͝o·rĭ. Moreover, less familiar words are likely to have ks from the spelling, or from a foreign pronunciation, as in axil'la, etc. Exhaust' (ĕg·zôst') and exhort' (ĕg·zôrt') are regular, the h being silent; so is exhale', being ĕg·zāl', if h is silent, but ĕks·hāl' if it is sounded, ks being regular before a consonant sound

§ 129. y in English spells one consonant (yes) and the following four vowels: (1) ī (sky, defy, style, etc.); (2) ĭ (lyric, nymph, pity, ready (§ 130), etc.); (3) ŭ (myrrh, myrtle, etc.); (4) ē (martyr, zephyr, etc.). y (or ey) is the regular spelling for the final sounds ī (fly) and ĭ (ready, money). These sounds of y may be indicated without respelling as in skȳ, nȳmph, mȳrrh, martȳr.

§ 130. Unaccented final y as in ready, or ey as in money, varies considerably from accented ĭ. For this variation and for that of medial y (analysis), the equivalent of medial unaccented ĭ (charĭty), see §§ 53, 54.

§ 131. As a consonant, y is the typical palatal semivowel, formed with the front of the tongue, behind the tip (which is lowered), near or touching the hard palate. It corresponds to the sound of j in German and Latin. English y differs from that of German and some other European languages in having no fricative or other sound but voice. It is analogous to w in being a gliding sound (§ 124). It is spelled y in year, you, beyond, etc.; i in poniard, union, etc.; e in feud (fūd), linear (lĭn'ē·ĕr; lĭn'yĕr); j in hallelujah; g in vignette. It is sounded without being spelled by a separate letter in use, unite, value, etc.

Like w, consonant y can occur only before vowels, not at the end of words. When written at the end of words, it is: (1) a vowel (ready); (2) a diphthong (sky); (3) the "vanish" of the partial diphthong ā (day, they); or (4) the second element of a full diphthong oi (boy). Unlike w, y by itself can spell a vowel (ready) or a diphthong (sky).

Z

§ 132. z as in zeal, hazy, buzz, etc., is the voiced tongue-point alveolar fricative continuant corresponding to voiceless s (§ 97). z is often spelled with s, as in busy, his, ears, robs, roses, etc. It is rarely spelled sc (one pronunciation of discern) or c (one pronunciation of suffice, sacrifice).

§ 133. z as in azure, seizure, grazier, etc., has the sound of zh, the voiced correlative of sh. The same sound is spelled s in vision, measure, etc. In the foregoing, the zh sound results from the palatalization of z before i or y (§ 103). zh is also spelled in French derivatives by g (rouge) and by j (bijou). It forms the second element of the consonantal diphthong j (nearly d + zh).

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN ENTRIES

Vowels not followed by a consonant in the same syllable are to be pronounced long (ā, ē, ī, ō, ū), and vowels followed by a consonant in the same syllable are to be pronounced short (ă, ĕ, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ), unless the respelling for pronunciation indicates otherwise. Consonants have the same value as in similar situations in English unless the respelling indicates otherwise. For those who prefer to pronounce the Latin entries according to the "Roman" method, the syllabification as indicated, together with the rules for such pronunciation as set forth in the Latin grammars, will be a sufficient guide.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

A careful reading of the following Explanatory Notes will enable the user of this dictionary to locate quickly and easily the answers to his questions and will make plain the significance of the different kinds of type, the labels, the symbols, and the other conventions that make possible its compactness and fullness.

The regular order of arrangement of the parts of the entries in this dictionary is as follows (although, of course, not every entry has all of these parts): 1. The vocabulary entry. 2. The pronunciation, in parentheses. 3. The part of speech. 4. Inflectional forms. 5. The etymology, in square brackets. 6. The definition or definitions. 7. Synonyms and Antonyms. 8. Run-on entries.

In the following paragraphs, numbered to correspond with the numbers in the above list, each of these parts of the entry is discussed in detail with illustrations, usually in the form of references to entries in the Vocabulary. The sections numbered 9 and 10 deal with special types of composite entries calling for special interpretation; section 11 deals with pictorial illustrations.

1 The Vocabulary Entry (the term to be defined) is printed in heavy-faced type. The spelling, accent, syllabic division, hyphenation, variant forms, and capitalization are shown in the entry.

If the entry is a word of more than one syllable, the syllables are indicated by a centered period [·], or by a heavy accent [′] or a light accent [′]. Each of these indicates the end of a syllable — the point where a word should be divided at the end of a line in writing and printing. The accents also show on what syllables the stress falls in pronouncing a word. In hyphened words, the hyphen marks a syllabic division of the word.

When more than one spelling or form is given, the one printed first is in general to be preferred. If the forms are of equal or nearly equal standing, they are separated by a comma (canyon, cañon; sextet, sextette; inward, inwards) or by the word or (see 1st plane; sandbox tree; heath grass; real estate). If one form is distinctly preferable, the second form is usually preceded by the word "Also" (see envelope, n.) or its status is otherwise plainly indicated (see moonlit, candelabrum). Spellings proper in British use are regularly set off by a comma from the American spellings in vocabulary entries (analyze, analyse; peddler, pedlar). See British Spelling Preferences, page 1197.

Proper Names and Proper Adjectives either are entered with a capital letter or are treated otherwise to show the capitalization (see illuminati). Nouns which are proper nouns in one or more senses, but common nouns in other senses, have the facts shown by bracketed notes (see dharma).

Prefixes (such as pre-, sub-, un-), Suffixes (such as -ation, -hood, -ness), and Combining Forms (such as paleo-, -plasty) are entered and defined. See also § 9, below.

Foreign Words are indicated by prefixed parallel bars (see ‖Autobahn, ‖flâneur). These are terms that occur frequently in speech and in print in English, but are not generally considered to be Anglicized. While parallel bars are affixed to these words indicating them to be commonly italicized in printing and writing, italic type for these words in this dictionary is precluded by use of italics for several other purposes.

2. The Pronunciation is given, in parentheses, following the vocabulary entry. In the pronunciation, the word is respelled in the WEBSTER phonetic alphabet. (A working key to this alphabet is printed inside the covers at the front and back of this book; and a full key on page vii.) In the pronunciation respelling, a heavy accent mark [′] is placed after the syllable on which the chief stress falls in pronouncing the word; a light accent mark [′] is placed after a syllable on which there is a lighter, or secondary, stress; and a centered period [·] is placed after the syllables on which there is no stress.

In the pronunciation respelling the syllabic division sometimes differs from that of the heavy-faced entry because in the heavy-faced entry the division is according to printers' usage; in the pronunciation respelling, the division is according to speech; thus:

dou′ble (dŭb′l), mi·li′tia (mĭ·lĭsh′a), spe′cial (spĕsh′ăl), vi′sion (vĭzh′ŭn).

Figures within the parentheses with the pronunciation refer to sections of the Guide to Pronunciation in the Introduction, where additional information is given regarding the pronunciation of the word or the group of words to which it belongs.

A part or the whole of a pronunciation is often omitted when it is the same as that of a word immediately preceding and may be readily supplied from such preceding entry.

Accents and syllabic division only are given for some phrases and compounds, and for some derivatives ending in common suffixes such as -ess, -ing, -ist, -less, -ment, -ship, if the pronunciation is perfectly regular and can therefore easily be learned from the separate parts.

When two or more pronunciations are recorded the general rule has been to place first the one that has been selected as preferable. Each form entered, however, has the support of good usage, and in some cases this usage is nearly or quite equally divided. Specific variations of usage have been indicated by limiting words, as often, sometimes, etc.

Further explanations will be found on page vii and following.

3. The name of the Part of Speech follows the pronunciation or (if no pronunciation is given) the entry word. The part of speech is given as an italic abbreviation: n. for noun, v. for verb, adj. for adjective, pron. for pronoun, etc. (see list of abbreviations, page xxi). When the entry consists of two or more separate words it is not labeled except, for clarity, in a few instances, chiefly the proper nouns and adjectives run on after entries in the Gazetteer (as at Nova Scotia, page 1127).

Occasionally the same entry is labeled as belonging to two or more parts of speech; thus:

ago, adj. & adv.

If a verb is both transitive and intransitive and has more than one meaning, the transitive and intransitive meanings are usually separated and labeled v. t. and v. i. respectively, the second label being preceded by a heavy dash (see break, conduct). If the transitive and intransitive definitions of a verb can be combined without ambiguity or confusion, the label is v. t. & i., for verb transitive and intransitive (see concentrate, recite).

4. Inflectional Forms (as the plural of a noun, the past tense and the participles of a verb, and the comparative and superlative forms of an adjective or adverb [see COMPARISON, 2, in Vocab.]) are given, in SMALL CAPITALS (see mouse, shake, v.), when they are irregular or present difficulties of spelling or pronunciation.

The plural of nouns is indicated by the prefixed italic abbreviation pl. Plurals formed regularly, by the addition of s or es (see Orthography, § 12), are not ordinarily given. Plurals of compounds (such as compounds of man and berry) are often omitted when they are formed in the same way as the plurals of the main word. If a noun has the same form in both singular and plural, the label is n. sing. & pl. (see deer). When two (or more) plurals are given, the first is in general to be preferred. When different plurals are used for different senses of a word the usage is plainly indicated (see antenna, genius) See also the note at the entry of plural in the Vocabulary.

When a verb is entered without principal parts, such omission means that the past tense and past participle are formed by adding -ed (see climb) or, if the verb ends in a mute e, by dropping the e and adding -ed (see unite). Principal parts formed otherwise are shown in SMALL CAPITALS. The principal parts of verbs are separated by semicolons. When three forms are given (see blow) the first is the past tense; the second, the past participle; the third, the present participle. When only two forms are given (see abase) the first is both past tense and past participle. If alternative forms are given for any of the principal parts, these are set off from one another by commas (see bereave) or by words like or and also (see level). In complex situations, italic labels (past; past part.; and pres. part.) are added for complete clarity (see cleave). In the case of compound verbs formed from a verb whose principal parts are shown, a cross reference to the latter is often given instead of repeating the principal parts (see befall). For obvious compounds beginning with re-, no principal parts are given; readers should consult the main verb.

5. The Etymology, in square brackets, precedes the definition. For the meanings of abbreviations in the etymology, see list of abbreviations, page xxi. The following familiar conventions are used:

In the etymology the words in italic type are those, whether English or foreign, from which the vocabulary word is derived; definitions of the italicized words are printed in roman type:

cipher, n. [OF. cifre zero . . .]

When the only etymology is [F.], [L.], or the like, or when the etymology begins with F., OF., etc., followed by a comma, the source word in French or Latin is spelled in the same way as the English word:

front, n. [OF., forehead, . . .]

Occasionally, only the language source is given, the label being then preceded by "from" or "through." Intermediate steps in an etymology are sometimes omitted, being indicated by the words "deriv. of" (derivative of) or "ult. fr." (ultimately from):

almond, n. [From OF., ult. fr. L. amygdala, . . .]

Any prefix, suffix, or combining form used without definition will be found defined in its alphabetical place:

geology, n. [geo- + -logy.]

In the case of many words descended originally from Latin or Greek, the etymology gives also the primary Latin or Greek constituents of the word:

coleopterous, adj. [Gr. koleopteros, fr. koleos sheath + pteron wing.]

In words of Chinese origin, the small superior figures refer to the four tones of the Peking dialect, which is the accepted standard of speech:

ginseng, n. [Chin. (Pek.) jen^{2}-shen^{1}.]

These tones are pitched in different keys to facilitate the recognition of many words that have the same sound.

The history of a word is in general traced back as far as it can be with certainty. Thus if a Middle English word is the only etymology given, the source of the Middle English word is either unknown or doubtful:

wiggle, v. i. [ME. wigelen to totter, reel.]

In accordance with these conventions, the etymology of curfew [OF. cuevrefu, covrefeu, fr. covrir to cover + feu fire, fr. L. focus hearth.] will be read "curfew is from the Old French word spelled either cuevrefu or covrefeu, which is derived from the Old French words covrir meaning 'to cover' and feu meaning 'fire'; feu is from the Latin word focus meaning 'hearth.'"

6. The Definition follows the etymology. Heavy-faced Arabic numerals (1., 2., 3., etc.) are used to number definitions when the meanings are numerous or are quite divergent from one another. Heavy-faced letters (a, b, c) are used to group meanings that are very closely related; thus, several special senses (as in Botany definitions) may be separately lettered and placed under one number. In general, the technical and scientific senses are arranged in the alphabetical order of their subject labels. So far as possible the order of definitions is that of the historical order of development of the meanings of a word.

a. Various kinds of cross references sometimes take the place of a definition. A mere spelling variant is entered thus:

cañon. Var. of CANYON.

A common term having the same meaning as some more technical term fully defined at its own place or a technical term having the same meaning as a common term fully defined is often entered in one of these two ways:

founder, n. Veter. = LAMINITIS.

pertussis, n. Med. Whooping cough.

A term whose meaning is recorded under the entry of some other term is (if it seems to require separate entry at its own alphabetical place) entered thus:

Desdemona, n. See OTHELLO.

b. Labels, or italic epithets, are prefixed (often in abbreviated form: see page xxi) to many definitions. Subject Labels (as Law, Radio, Bot.) show the department of knowledge in which the word or the meaning occurs; Usage Labels (as Colloq., Dial., Slang) show its status in actual usage; Geographical Labels indicate the area in which (only or chiefly) it is used. When such labels follow the number or letter introducing a definition, they apply only to that definition; when they precede a number or letter they apply to everything that follows them.

c. Cross References, printed in SMALL CAPITALS, are made in order to guide the reader to further information. In such references in both the definitions and the etymologies: "See" leads to information that is either highly important or essential to an understanding of the meaning (see boldface, n.; and the etymology of foible); "Cf." means "compare," and leads to useful, interesting, or related material (see impetus, 1; and the etymology of nib, n.). For the use of cross references in connection with synonyms and antonyms, see § 7, below.

A cross reference to one of two or more entries that are spelled alike, especially when the entries belong to the same part of speech, is sometimes by number thus:

lamiaceous, adj. . . . See 1st MINT.

When the entries are of different parts of speech, a cross reference to one is usually made by part-of-speech label, thus:

field of force. = FIELD, n., 10.

Cross references to entries in the Biographical Names and Gazetteer sections of the back matter are indicated by means of the abbreviations Biog. and Gaz. in the reference.

7. The Synonymy, when given, is placed at the end of the entry and is introduced by the label Syn. Sometimes, it consists merely of a "word-finding" list of words of similar meaning, often with semicolons separating words that are synonyms in one sense from those that are synonyms in another sense. Sometimes the synonymy contains a full treatment of the distinction in meanings of a group of words, the words to be discriminated being printed in heavy-faced type (see bodily). A synonymy of this kind is printed as a separate paragraph, in distinctive type.

In the synonymy, a cross reference directs the reader to the entry where a full treatment is to be found. Thus, at defame the cross reference "See MALIGN" indicates that in the synonymy at malign the word defame is discussed.

Antonyms, when given, are in light-faced type, following the synonyms, and are introduced by the label Ant. The differences in meaning among antonyms are often discussed under the synonymy of another word to which a cross reference is given.

8. Run-on Entries are placed at the end of the paragraphed entries, with an intervening light dash. Such entries are usually derivative adjectives, adverbs, and nouns, and are of such a character that their meaning is easily inferred from the definition of the word to which they are attached (see colonize).

Often, when the run-on entry is the same word as the main entry but used as a different part of speech and requiring definition, the run-on entry consists only of a short heavy dash and the part-of-speech label (see best). The heavy dash is to be interpreted as standing for all spellings of the entry word if more than one is given (as: color, colour, n. . . . — v. t.).

In the Gazetteer, many proper adjectives and nouns derived from geographical names, and requiring no definition because their meaning is obvious, are run on after the appropriate entry chiefly for their spelling and pronunciation.

9. Lists of Self-explanatory Combinations are inserted frequently after prefixes and combining forms, and similar lists of combinations and phrases are sometimes given after nouns and adjectives (see non-, over-, micro-, air). These lists record the existence of hundreds of idiomatically formed expressions, and answer the question whether the terms included (and similar terms) are to be written or printed as hyphened compounds, as solid compounds, or as two words.

These self-explanatory lists are rather illustrative than exhaustive. The list, for example, at cross shows the various ways of combining but by no means all existing combinations. The lists serve also as guides in the use of prefixes and combining forms, most of which, like hyper- and multi-, are free for use in forming new compounds at need.

10. Compounds and Phrases. Many two-word and three-word compounds, such as those consisting of an adjective (or an attributive noun) and a noun are given main vocabulary entry in their alphabetical place (see flying buttress, mountain sheep, shore bird). Combinations that belong naturally with some main vocabulary entry have generally, however, been treated at that entry. Thus, the terms blue crane and sandhill crane are both covered at the entry crane and not at their own alphabetical places. (See also covenant, year.) This method of treatment has permitted the inclusion of information about many two-word and three-word entries, especially names of varieties of plants and animals, that would otherwise have been omitted for lack of space.

Verb phrases are given following the entry of their verb, a group of such phrases being generally printed as a block paragraph alphabetically arranged (see fall and make).

Prepositional phrases are run on, following an em dash, after the most important word of the phrase.

11. Illustrations. The ratio of the size of figures of plants and animals shown in illustrations to natural size is usually indicated by a fraction in parentheses, as whale (1/300), that is, the natural overall length is 300 times the 1½ inches of the figure, or 37½ feet. Where the illustration is larger than natural size, this fact is indicated by a multiple in parentheses, as flea (×8), that is, the natural size is one eighth that of the figure shown.

A DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

A, a (ā), n.; pl. A's, A'S, As, AS, AES (āz). 1. The first letter of the English alphabet. A comes from Latin A, which came from Greek A (alpha), which in turn was derived from the first letter of the Phoenician alphabet. 2. The sound of this letter A. In Modern English the letter represents various sounds. See Pron., § 5. 3 Music a The sixth tone in the model major scale (that of C), or the first of its relative minor scale. b A key or string producing this tone; also, a symbol for the tone. See PITCH, Illust. 4. As a symbol, the first in order or of its class. — A 1 (ā′ wŭn′). See A ONE.

a (ȧ; emphatic ā), adj., or indefinite article. [Shortened fr. AN, adj.] 1. One; some particular; one kind of. 2. Any; each; the same. 3. [Deriv. fr. AS. an, on.] In, to, or for each; as, twice a week.

☞ A is used before words beginning with a consonant sound (see AN, adj.).

a (ȧ), prep., a-, a- (ȧ-), prefix. [AS. an, on.] On; in; at; as in *a*bed, *a*sleep, now*a*days, *a*loud, a hunting.

a- (ȧ-). A prefix: 1. From Anglo-Saxon ā-, often having intensive significance, as in *a*rise. 2. From Anglo-Saxon of, orig. meaning off, as in *a*down. 3. Reduced form of Latin ad, to, as in *a*scribe. 4. = AB- (before p, m, v). 5. (pron. ȧ-; ă-; ā-; ä-) [Gr. an- not, a- before consonants.] Denoting -less, not, without, un-, as in *a*byss, *a*gnostic, *a*sexual, *a*symmetric. Called alpha privative.

a, a′ (ä; ð), adj. Scot. All.

a (ȧ), pron. Dial. = I, HE, SHE, IT, THEY.

a (ȧ), v. Unemphatic form of HAVE.

aard′vark′ (ärd′värk′), n [S. Afr. D., earth pig.] Either of two African ant-eating burrowing mammals of the genus Orycteropus.

aard′wolf′ (ärd′wo͝olf′), n. [D., earth wolf.] A hyenalike quadruped (Proteles cristata) of South Africa. It feeds on carrion and insects.

Aar′on (ăr′ŭn), n. Bib. The first high priest of the Jews, a Levite, brother of Moses.

Ab (ăb; äb), n. [Heb.] See JEWISH CALENDAR.

ab- (ăb-; ȧb-), abs-, a-. A prefix from Lat. ab-, signifying from, away, off, away from.

a′ba (ä′bȧ), n. [Ar. 'abā'.] A fabric woven from the hair of camels or goats; also, a loose sleeveless garment worn by Arabs.

a′ba-cá′ (ä′bä-kä′), n. [Tag.] Manila hemp; also, the plant that yields this fiber.

a-back′ (ȧ-băk′), adv. [AS. on bæc at, on, or toward the back.] 1. Archaic. Backward; back. 2. Naut. Backward against the mast; with sails pressed back, as by head winds, checking headway. Hence, to be taken aback, to be surprised and checked or disconcerted.

ab′a-cus (ăb′ȧ-kŭs), n.; pl. ABACI (-sī), -CUSES (-kŭs-ĕz; -ĭz). [L., fr. Gr. abax.] 1. An instrument for performing calculations by sliding counters along rods or in grooves. 2. Arch. The uppermost member or division of a capital. See IONIC, Illust.

Abacus, 1 (showing total of 123,456).

A-bad′don (ȧ-băd′ŭn), n. [Heb. ābaddōn destruction.] 1. The place of the lost in Sheol; the bottomless pit. 2. The angel of the bottomless pit; Apollyon. Rev. ix. 11.

a-baft′ (ȧ-băft′; 9), prep. [a- on + ME. baft, fr. AS. bæftan, fr. be by + æftan behind.] Naut. Behind; toward the stern from; to the rear of. — adv. Naut. Toward or at the stern; aft; astern.

ab′a-lo′ne (ăb′ȧ-lō′nē), n. [Origin uncert.] Any of a genus (Haliotis) of rock-clinging gastropod mollusks with a flattened shell of slightly spiral form, lined with mother-of-pearl and having a row of apertures along its outer edge; — called also ear shell.

Abalone Shell. (½)

a-ban′don (ȧ-băn′dŭn), v. t.; A-BAN′DONED (-dŭnd); A-BAN′DON-ING. [OF. abandoner, fr. a (L. ad) + bandon jurisdiction, fr. LL. bandum public proclamation.] 1. To give up with the intent of never again claiming one's rights or interests in; to give over or surrender completely; to desert. 2. To give (oneself) up without attempt at self-control, as to grief. 3. Obs. To banish; expel. Shak. — a-ban′don-er, n. — a-ban′don-ment, n.

Syn. (1) Abandon, desert, forsake mean to quit absolutely. Abandon emphasizes leaving a person or thing to the mercy of someone or something else; desert implies previous occupation, companionship, or guardianship and, sometimes, culpability; forsake implies a breaking off of a close association whether by repudiation, renunciation, or the like. — Ant. Reclaim.

(2) See RELINQUISH.

a-ban′don (ȧ-băn′dŭn; F. ȧ′bäN′dôN′), n. [F.] A yielding to natural impulses; careless freedom or ease.

A B C

a-ban′doned (ȧ-băn′dŭnd), adj. 1. Forsaken. 2. Given up to vice; irreclaimably wicked; irredeemable. — Syn. Profligate, dissolute, reprobate. — Ant. Reclaimed; redeemed, regenerate.

‖à bas (ȧ bä′). [F.] Down with; — in disapprobation.

a-base′ (ȧ-bās′), v. t.; A-BASED′ (ȧ-bāst′); A-BAS′ING (-bās′ĭng). [OF. abaissier. See BASE, adj.] To lower; bring down; cast down; now only specif.: to lower or reduce in rank, estimation, etc.; to degrade; as, rascals so abased. — a-base′ment, n.

Syn. Abase, demean, debase, degrade, humble, humiliate mean to lower a person in his own estimation or in that of others. Abase suggests loss, often a voluntary loss, of dignity or prestige; demean, loss of social standing by an unsuitable act or association; debase, a deterioration, especially of moral standards or character; degrade, the taking of a step or steps downward, sometimes in rank but more often on the road to moral degeneration; humble suggests a being forced to realize one's own littleness or impotence, usually without loss of self-respect, thus differing from humiliate, which always implies mortification or deep shame. — Ant. Exalt.

a-bash′ (ȧ-băsh′), v. t. [OF. esbahir, fr. L. ex out + bah, interj. of astonishment. In ME. somewhat confused with abase.] To destroy the self-possession or self-confidence of; to confuse or confound. — Syn. See EMBARRASS. — Ant. Embolden: reassure. — a-bash′ment, n.

a-bate′ (ȧ-bāt′), v. t.; A-BAT′ED (-bāt′ĕd; -ĭd); A-BAT′ING. [OF. abatre, abattre, fr. a to + batre, battre, to beat.] 1. Obs. exc. Law. To demolish; to put an end to; to quash; as, to abate a nuisance or action. 2. To reduce in amount, degree, intensity, etc.; to diminish; as, to abate a tax or one's zeal. 3. Archaic. a To reduce as in size or value. b To deprive (a person of something). c To blunt (a point or edge). 4. To deduct; omit; as, to abate part of a price. — Syn. See DECREASE. — Ant. Augment. — v. i. To be abated; specif.: a To be defeated, or come to nought, as a writ. b To diminish or become less intense or violent; as, the disease is abating; a storm abates in fury. — a-bat′a-ble (ȧ-bāt′ȧ-b'l), adj. — a-bat′er (-bāt′ĕr), n.

Syn. Abate, subside, wane, ebb agree in meaning to die down in force and intensity. Abate stresses the idea of progressive diminution, as of a wind; subside, the cessation of turbulence or agitation, as of waves; wane, the fading or weakening of something good, such as interest; ebb, the recession or gradual loss of that which fluctuates, such as one's vitality or a passion. — Ant. Revive.

a-bate′ment (ȧ-bāt′mĕnt), n. Act of abating, or state of being abated; diminution; mitigation; also, amount abated; deduction.

ab′a-tis (ăb′ȧ-tĭs or, esp. Brit., ȧ-băt′ĭ), n. sing. & pl. [F., fr. abattre to fell.] A defense formed of felled trees the sharpened ends of whose branches face the enemy.

A battery (ā). Radio. An electric battery used to heat the filament serving as cathode in an electron tube.

ab′at-toir′ (ăb′ȧ-twär′), n.; pl. -TOIRS (-twärz′). [F., fr. abattre to fell.] A slaughterhouse.

ab-ax′i-al (ăb-ăk′sĭ-ŭl), adj. [ab- + L. axis axle.] Situated out of, or directed away from, the axis.

ab′ba-cy (ăb′ȧ-sĭ), n.; pl. -CIES (-sĭz). [LL. abbatia.] Dignity, estate, jurisdiction, or term of tenure of an abbot.

ab-ba′tial (ȧ-bā′shăl), adj. Pert. to an abbot or abbey.

a·chon'drite (ă·kŏn'drīt), n. A stony meteorite without small rounded grains or spherules.

ach'ro·mat'ic (ăk'rō·măt'ĭk), adj. [Gr. achrōmatos colorless, fr. a- not + chrōma, -atos, color.] 1. Optics. Refracting light without decomposing it into its constituent colors; giving images practically free from extraneous colors. 2. Biol. a Not readily colored by the usual staining agents. b Composed of achromatin. 3. Music. Without accidentals or modulation. 4. Colorless. — ach'ro·mat'i·cal·ly (-ĭ·kăl·ĭ), adv. — a·chro'ma·tic'i·ty (ă·krō'mă·tĭs'ĭ·tĭ), n. — a·chro'ma·tism (ă·krō'mă·tĭz'm), n.

Achromatic Lens.

a·chro'ma·tin (ă·krō'mă·tĭn), n. Biol. The substance of the cell nucleus not readily colored by basic stains.

a·chro'ma·tize (-tīz), v. t. To deprive of color; to make achromatic.

a·chro'ma·tous (ă·krō'mă·tŭs), adj. [See ACHROMATIC.] Lacking, or deficient in, color; as, achromatous blood.

a·chro'mic (-mĭk), a·chro'mous (-mŭs), adj. [Gr. achrōmos colorless, fr. a- not + chrōma color.] Free from color; colorless.

a·cic'u·la (ă·sĭk'ū·lă), n.; pl. -LAE (-lē). [L., dim. of acus needle.]

A needlelike spine, bristle, or crystal. — a·cic′u·lar (ȧ·sĭk′ū·lẽr), adj. — a·cic′u·lar·ly, adv. — a·cic′u·late (-lāt), a·cic′u·lat′ed (-lāt′ĕd; -ĭd), adj.

a·cic′u·lum (ȧ·sĭk′ū·lŭm), n.; pl. -LUMS (-lŭmz), -LA (-lȧ). [NL.] a = ACICULA. b Zool. A seta.

ac′id (ăs′ĭd), adj. [F. or L.; F. acide, fr. L. acidus, fr. acere to be sour.] 1. Sour, sharp, or biting to the taste; tart; also, sour-tempered; biting; as, acid intelligence. 2. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of an acid; having one of the reactions characteristic of acids. 3. Metal. Pertaining to, or made by, a process (acid process), as in steelmaking, in which the furnace is lined with acidic, or highly siliceous, material, and acidic slag is added to the molten charge; — opp. to basic. 4. Petrog. Rich in silica. — Syn. See SOUR.

— n. 1. A sour substance. 2. Chem. Any one of a class of substances which typically are soluble in water, sour in taste, and redden litmus; according to modern views, a compound containing hydrogen replaceable by positive elements or radicals to form salts, or a compound that dissociates in aqueous solution with the production of hydrogen ions, or still more recently, a compound or ion that can give protons (hydrogen ions) to some other substance.

☞ Names of oxygen acids end ordinarily in -ic and their corresponding salts in -ate. Salts formed from -ous acids take the ending -ite; as, potassium chlor*ite*.

ac′id-fast′, adj. Not easily decolorized by acids or other agents when stained. — ac′id-fast′ness, n.

ac′id-form′ing, adj. Forming acid; of foods, yielding a preponderance of acid residue after combustion.

a·cid′ic (ȧ·sĭd′ĭk), adj. Acid-forming; as, silicon is the chief acidic element of rocks; also, rich in silica.

a·cid′i·fy (-ĭ·fī), v. t. & i.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY′ING. [L. acidus acid + -fy.] To make or become acid; to convert into an acid. — a·cid′i·fi′a·ble (-fī′ȧ·b'l), adj. — a·cid′i·fi·ca′tion (-fĭ·kā′shŭn), n.

ac′i·dim′e·ter (ăs′ĭ·dĭm′ē·tẽr), n. [L. acidus acid + -meter.] Chem. An apparatus or solution for ascertaining the strength or the amount of acid present. — ac′i·dim′e·try (-trĭ), n. — ac′i·di·met′ric (-dĭ·mĕt′rĭk), ac′i·di·met′ri·cal (-rĭ·kăl), adj.

a·cid′i·ty (ȧ·sĭd′ĭ·tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). 1. Quality or state of being acid or sour. 2. Degree of sourness. 3. Hyperacidity.

ac′id-ly (ăs′ĭd·lĭ), adv. In an acid manner; bitingly.

ac′id-ness, n. Acidity.

ac′i·doph′i·lus milk (ăs′ĭ·dŏf′ĭ·lŭs). Milk fermented by bacteria (species Lactobacillus acidophilus) and used therapeutically to change the intestinal flora.

ac′i·do′sis (ăs′ĭ·dō′sĭs), n. [NL., fr. E. acid + -osis.] Med. An abnormal state of reduced alkalinity of the blood and of the body tissues. — ac′i·dot′ic (-dŏt′ĭk), adj.

acid test. A severe or decisive test, as of authenticity.

a·cid′u·late (ȧ·sĭd′ū·lāt), v. t. To make acidulous.

a·cid′u·lent (-lĕnt), adj. Acidulous.

a·cid′u·lous (-lŭs), adj. [L. acidulus, dim. of acidus sour.] Slightly sour; subacid; sourish. — Syn. See SOUR.

ac′i·er·ate (ăs′ĭ·ẽr·āt), v. t. [F. acier steel + -ate.] To convert into steel; as, to acierate iron by cementation. — ac′i·er·a′tion (-ā′shŭn), n.

ac′i·form (ăs′ĭ·fôrm), adj. [L. acus needle + -form.] Shaped like a needle.

ac′i·nac′i·form (ăs′ĭ·năs′ĭ·fôrm), adj. [L. acinaces a short sword + -form.] Bot. Scimitar-shaped; — of a leaf.

a·cin′i·form (ȧ·sĭn′ĭ·fôrm), adj. [L. acinus a grape, grapestone + -form.] a Having the form of a cluster of grapes. b Full of small kernels like a grape.

ac′i·nous (ăs′ĭ·nŭs), adj. Also ac′i·nose (-nōs). [L. acinosus, fr. acinus grapestone.] Consisting of or containing acini.

ac′i·nus (ăs′ĭ·nŭs), n.; pl. -NI (-nī). [L., grape, grapestone.] 1. Bot. a An individual drupelet in a multiple fruit, as in the blackberry. b A berry, esp. a grape. c A small bony kernel, as a grapestone. 2. Anat. One of the smallest sacs of a racemose gland.

a·mi'do·gen (ə·mē'dŏ·jĕn; ə·mĭd'ŏ·jĕn), n. [amido- + -gen.] Chem. The radical NH_2, which is known only in combination in amides and amines.

Am'i·dol (ăm'ĭ·dōl; -dŏl), n. A trade-mark applied to a salt (commonly the hydrochloride), of 2,4-di-amino phenol, $C_6H_3(NH_2)_2OH$, used as a photographic developer.

a·mid'ships (ə·mĭd'shĭps), adv Also a·mid'ship. Naut. In or toward the middle of a ship between stem and stern.

a·midst' (ə·mĭdst'), a·mid' (ə·mĭd'), prep. [AS. on middan in the middle, fr midde the middle. See MIDST.] In or into the midst or middle of; among.

‖a·mi'go (ä·mē'gō), n. ; pl. -GOS (-gōs; E. -gōz). [Sp., fr. L. amicus.] A friend; specif , a friendly native.

a·mine' (ə·mēn'; ăm'ĭn), n. Also am'in. [ammonia + -ine] Chem. Any of a class of compounds derived from ammonia by replacement of hydrogen by one or more univalent hydrocarbon radicals a·mi'no (ə·mē'nō; ăm'ĭ·nō), adj., a·mi'no- (-nŏ-), prefix. [From AMINE] Chem. Pertaining to or containing the group NH_2 united to a radical other than an acid radical, as in a·mi'no·ben'zene; — distinguished from amido, amido-.

amino acid Chem. Any acid containing the amino group, NH_2. Some thirty have been isolated from proteins, of which they are the chief components a·mi'no·ben·zo'ic ac'id (ə·mē'nō·bĕn·zō'ĭk; ăm'ĭ·nō-). Org. Chem. Any of three crystalline acids $H_2NC_6H_4CO_2H$. The yellowish-red para (p-) acid, a growth vitamin of the B group, is found in yeast, bran, etc., and also made synthetically. It is sometimes called the "anti-gray-hair vitamin." Abbr. PABA, paba.

a·mi'no·plast' (ə·mē'nŏ·plăst'; ăm'ĭ·nŏ-), n. [amino- + Gr plastos formed.] A synthetic resin made from amino or amido compounds — a·mi'no·plas'tic (-plăs'tĭk), adj.

a·mi'no·py'rine (-pī'rēn; -rĭn), n. [amino- + antipyretic + -ine.] Pharm. A white crystalline powder, $C_{13}H_{17}N_3O$, used as an antipyretic and anodyne.

a·mir', a·meer' (ə·mēr'), n. [See EMIR.] A Mohammedan noble, esp. a prince of Afghanistan.

Am'ish (ăm'ĭsh; ä'mĭsh), adj. Of or pertaining to, or named from, Jacob Amen, or Ammann, a strict Mennonite of the 17th century; hence, pertaining to or designating his followers. — n. Eccl. Hist. Collectively, the Amish Mennonites.

a·miss' (ə·mĭs'), adv. [a- + miss.] Astray; faultily; improperly. — adj. Beside the mark; faulty; improper; — used in the predicate am'i·to'sis (ăm'ĭ·tō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr a- not + mitosis.] Biol. Cell division in which there is first a simple cleavage of the nucleus without change in its structure, followed by the division of the cytoplasm; direct cell division; — opposed to mitosis. — am'i·tot'ic (-tŏt'ĭk), adj.

am'i·ty (ăm'ĭ·tĭ), n. ; pl. AMITIES (-tĭz). [F. amitié, fr. OF., fr. L. amicus friendly.] Friendship; friendly relations, esp. between nations. — Syn. Friendship, comity, good will. — Ant. Enmity.

am'me'ter (ăm'mē'tĕr; ăm'ĕ·tĕr), n. [ampere + -meter.] Elec. An instrument for measuring electric current.

am'mi·a'ceous (ăm'ĭ·ā'shŭs), adj. Belonging to the carrot family (Ammiaceae, syn. Apiaceae); apiaceous. See CARROT.

am'mine (ăm'ēn; ă·mēn'), n [ammonia + 2d -ine.] Chem a A molecule of ammonia, NH_3, as it exists in certain complex compounds called am·mi'no com'pounds (ă·mē'nō; ăm'ĭ·nō). b An ammino compound.

Am'mon (ăm'ŏn), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ammōn, fr. Egypt Amen] 1 Egypt Relig Amen, the deity. 2. Class Relig. An epithet of Zeus and Jupiter as worshiped in Egypt and Libya.

am·mo'ni·a (ă·mō'nĭ·ă; -mōn'yă), n. [From sal ammoniac] 1 Chem A colorless gaseous compound of nitrogen and hydrogen, NH_3, of extremely pungent smell and taste Ammonia can easily be condensed by cold and pressure to a colorless liquid boiling at −33 3° C. 2 Popularly, the aqueous solution of the gas; — called also aqua ammoniae, ammonia water, and spirits of hartshorn.

am·mo'ni·ac (ă·mō'nĭ·ăk), n., or gum ammoniac [F., fr L., fr Gr. ammōniakon a gum said to distill from plants growing near the temple of Jupiter Ammon] The aromatic gum resin of a Persian herb (Dorema ammoniacum) of the carrot family. It is used as an expectorant and stimulant, and as a cement.

am'mo·ni'a·cal (ăm'ō·nī'ă·kăl), adj. Also am·mo'ni·ac. Of or pertaining to ammonia; containing, or having the properties of, ammonia am·mo'ni·ate (ă·mō'nĭ·āt), v. t. To combine with ammonia.

am·mon'ic (ă·mŏn'ĭk; ă·mō'nĭk), adj. Also am·mon'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl). Of or pertaining to ammonia or the radical ammonium.

am·mon'i·fi·ca'tion (ă·mŏn'ĭ·fĭ·kā'shŭn), n [ammonia + -fication] 1. Impregnation with ammonia or ammonium compounds 2 Decomposition with production of ammonia, esp by the action of bacteria on nitrogenous organic matter. — am·mon'i·fy (ă·mŏn'ĭ·fī), v t & i.

am'mo·nite (ăm'ō·nīt), n. [L. cornu Ammonis horn of Ammon.] Paleontol Any of numerous fossil shells of cephalopods having the form of a flat spiral, especially abundant in the Mesozoic age.

am·mo'ni·um (ă·mō'nĭ·ŭm), n Chem A strongly basic radical, NH_4, whose compounds resemble those of the alkali metals When ammonia reacts with acids, the salts of ammonium are formed, as ammonium chloride (or sal ammoniac), NH_4Cl, used as a source of ammonia, ammonium nitrate, NH_4NO_3, used in explosives and as a fertilizer, ammonium sulfate, $(NH_4)_2SO_4$, used as a fertilizer and as a source of ammonium compounds.

ammonium hydroxide Chem. A compound, NH_4OH, formed when ammonia dissolves in water, and existing only in solution.

am'mu·ni'tion (ăm'ū·nĭsh'ŭn), n [F. amunition, formerly used for munition. See MUNITION] 1 In warfare, the projectiles thrown against an enemy, such as bullets, shells, grenades, and bombs, with their necessary propellants, detonators, fuses, and primers. 2. Any material that may be used in attack or defense.

as'tro- (ăs'trō-). [Gr. astron star.] A combining form meaning of or pertaining to the stars.

as'tro·labe (-lāb), n [From OF. and ML., fr. Gr. astrolabon, fr astron star + lambanein to take] Astron. A compact instrument for observing the positions of the celestial bodies, now superseded by the sextant.

as·trol'o·ger (ăs·trŏl'ə·jẽr), n. One who practices astrology.

as·trol'o·gy (-jĭ), n. [From F., fr. L., fr. Gr. astrologia, deriv. of astron star + logos discourse.] 1. Obs. Practical astronomy. 2. The pseudo science which treats of the influences of the stars upon human affairs, and of foretelling terrestrial events by their positions and aspects. — as'tro·log'ic (ăs'trə·lŏj'ĭk), as'tro·log'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl), adj — as'tro·log'i·cal·ly, adv

as·tron'o·mer (ăs·trŏn'ə·mẽr), n. One versed in astronomy; one who makes observations of celestial phenomena as'tro·nom'i·cal (ăs'trə·nŏm'ĭ·kăl), as'tro·nom'ic (-ĭk), adj. 1. Of or pertaining to astronomy; as, astronomical time. 2. Enormously or inconceivably large, like the quantities used in astronomy. — as'tro·nom'i·cal·ly, adv.

as·tron'o·my (ăs·trŏn'ə·mĭ), n. [From OF., fr. L., fr. Gr. astronomia, fr. astron star + nemein to distribute, arrange.] 1. The science which treats of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, constitution, etc. 2. A treatise on this science.

as'tro·pho·tog'ra·phy (ăs'trō·fə·tŏg'rə·fĭ), n. The application of photography to astronomical investigations. — as'tro·pho'to·graph'ic (-fō'tə·grăf'ĭk), adj.

as'tro·phys'i·cist (-fĭz'ĭ·sĭst), n. A specialist in astrophysics.

as'tro·phys'ics (-fĭz'ĭks), n.; see -ICS. [astro- + physics.] The science that deals principally with the constitution of the celestial bodies. — as'tro·phys'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl), adj.

as'tro·sphere (ăs'trō·sfẽr; 27), n. Biol. a The centrosphere. b The entire aster exclusive of the centrosome.

as·tu'cious, as·tu'tious (ăs·tū'shŭs), adj. [F. astucieux.] Astute.

as·tute' (ăs·tūt'), adj. [L. astutus, fr. astus craft.] Shrewdly discerning and sagacious; acute; wily. — Syn. See SHREWD. — as·tute'ly, adv. — as·tute'ness, n.

As·ty'a·nax (ăs·tī'ə·năks), n. Gr. Myth. Son of Hector and Andromache, hurled by the Greeks from the walls of Troy, that he might not restore the kingdom as predicted.

a·sty'lar (ā·stī'lẽr), adj [a- not + Gr. stylos pillar.] Arch. Without columns or pilasters.

a·sun'der (ə·sŭn'dẽr), adv. [a- on + sunder; AS. on sundran.] Into parts; into different pieces; as, to cut it asunder. — adj. Situated apart; as, wide asunder in meaning.

A'sur (ä'sōōr). Var. of ASHUR.

a·sy'lum (ə·sī'lŭm), n.; pl. -LUMS (-lŭmz), -LA (-lə). [L., fr. Gr. asylon, fr. asylos inviolable, fr. a- not + sylon right of seizure.] 1. An inviolable sanctuary giving shelter to criminals and debtors, as anciently a temple or altar, etc. 2. Any place of retreat and security; shelter. 3. Protection afforded by such sanctuary or place of retreat. 4 An institution for relief of the destitute or afflicted, esp. one for the insane.

a·sym'me·try (ā·sĭm'ē·trĭ), n. [Gr. asymmetria.] Lack of symmetry. — a'sym·met'ric (ā'sĭ·mĕt'rĭk; ăs'ĭ-), a'sym·met'ri·cal (-rĭ·kăl), adj — a'sym·met'ri·cal·ly, adv.

as'ymp·tote (ăs'ĭm·tōt; ăs'ĭmp-), n. [Gr. asymptōtos, fr. a- not + sympiptein to fall together] Math. A line that is the limiting position which the tangent to a curve approaches, as the point of contact recedes indefinitely along an infinite branch of the curve.

as'ymp·tot'ic (-tŏt'ĭk), as'ymp·tot'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl), adj. Math. Of or pertaining to an asymptote — as'ymp·tot'i·cal·ly, adv

a·syn'chro·nous (ā·sĭng'krə·nŭs), adj. Not synchronous. — a·syn'chro·nism (-nĭz'm), n

as'yn·det'ic (ăs'ĭn·dĕt'ĭk), adj. Using asyndeton; not joined by conjunctions. — as'yn·det'i·cal·ly (-ĭ·kăl·ĭ), adv.

a·syn'de·ton (ə·sĭn'dē·tŏn), n. [L., deriv. of Gr. a- not + syndetos bound together.] Rhet. Omission of the conjunctions which ordinarily join co-ordinate words or clauses (I came, I saw, I conquered).

at (ăt; ət; 4), prep. [AS. æt.] Primarily, at expresses the relation of presence or contact in space or time, or of direction toward. Hence, it implies: 1. Simple presence in, on, or by, or near to; as, at the center; at home; at hand; sick at heart; out at the elbows. 2. Direction, terminal point, or end; — with verbs of motion; as, enter at the north door; aim at a mark; be angry at one; to guess at. 3. Relation of employment or action; as, at work; at meat (eating); at the controls; what are you at? clever at skating. 4. Situation in an active or passive state; as, the stag at bay; at war; at ease; at your service; at random. 5. Relation of source, cause, or occasion; as, merry at the sight; at short notice; at one's hands. 6 Position in a series or scale; relative order, degree, rate, or value; as, with the mercury at 80°; at first; at best; at full speed; sold at six shillings Symbol, in Commerce, @. — at one. In concord or friendship; in agreement; agreed.

☞ Idiomatic usage when indicating place: at a local point, as at an institution, office, meeting, and at a town or city regarded as a point along a course or on a map, also at a street number; in the interior as of a county, district, or building, and in a town or city regarded as an area or scene implying destination or permanent stay or one's personal familiar locale, also according to British usage, in a street; on a side, boundary, coast, and on a street, on the north, on or at one's right.

at'a·bal (ăt'ə·băl), n [Sp., fr. Ar. al-ṭabl the drum.] A kettledrum; a kind of tabor, used by Moors at'a·ghan (ăt'ə·găn). Var. of YATAGHAN.

At'a·brine (ăt'ə·brĭn), n. A trade-mark applied to the antimalarial drug quinacrine hydrochloride.

At'a·lan'ta (ăt'ə·lăn'tə), n. [L., fr. Gr. Atalantē.] Gr. Myth. A heroine, beautiful and fleet of foot. In Boeotian legend she challenges her suitors to a race, death being the penalty of defeat, her hand the prize. Hippomenes defeats her, dropping on the course three golden apples given him by Aphrodite, which Atalanta stoops to pick up.

at'a·man (ăt'ə·măn), n. = HETMAN.

at'a·mas'co lil'y (ăt'ə·măs'kō). [Virginian attamusco, lit, stained with red] Any of a genus (Zephyranthes) of American bulbous plants of the amaryllis family, with pink, white, or yellowish flowers at'a·vism (ăt'ə·vĭz'm), n. [L. atavus ancestor.] Biol. The recurrence, in a descendant, of characters of a remote ancestor, as a great-grandparent; renewed manifestation of heredity after remaining latent during one or more generations; reversion to a more primitive type. — at'a·vist (-vĭst), n — at'a·vis'tic (-vĭs'tĭk), adj.

a·tax'i·a (ə·tăk'sĭ·ə), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ataxia, fr. ataktos out of order, fr. a- not + taktos ordered.] Med. Lack of normal co-ordination of parts, esp. inability to co-ordinate voluntary muscular movements. See LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA. — a·tax'ic (-sĭk), adj & n.

a·tax'ite (ə·tăk'sīt), n. Petrog A volcanic rock whose components have no definite arrangement.

ate (āt; Brit. commonly ĕt), past of EAT.

A'te (ā'tē), n. [Gr atē.] a [not cap.] Blind impulse leading men on to ruin; — personified, as in Greek tragedy b A goddess of infatuation, variously regarded as a daughter of Zeus or Eris (strife).

-ate (-āt; -ət; -ĭt). [L. -atus, the noun ending.] A suffix used to form: 1. Nouns denoting office or function, or the persons having it, as in tribu*nate,* episco*pate.* 2. Participial nouns; as, le*gate,* one deputed; mand*ate,* something commanded. 3. [L. -atum, neut. of -atus.] Chem. Names of the salts and esters formed from those acids whose names end in -ic (except a few whose names begin with hydro-, hydr-, as hydrocyanic, hydriodic); as, sulf*ate* from sulfur*ic* acid, nitr*ate* from nitr*ic* acid, etc. It is also used in the case of a few other compounds; as, methyl*ate.*

-ate (-āt; -ət; -ĭt). [From L -atus, the past part. ending of 1st conj. verbs.] A suffix used to form: 1 Participial adjectives equivalent to those formed by the ending -ed, as in desol*ate,* sed*ate,* orn*ate,* temper*ate.* Causative verbs are formed from such adjectives. 2. Adjectives based on nouns, with the sense possessing or characterized by having, esp. in Bot and Zool., as in chord*ate,* branchi*ate.* 3. (pron. -āt) Verbs formed (on the analogy of causative verbs from adjectives in -ate) by Englishing Latin verbs of the 1st conjugation, as in fascin*ate,* vener*ate,* concentr*ate,* etc., or by adding the suffix to Latin, or sometimes other, elements where no corresponding Latin verb exists, as in capaci*tate.* 4. (pron. -ət) Chem. Verbs with the meaning to combine, impregnate, or treat with, as in: camphor*ate,* to combine or impregnate with camphor; chlorin*ate* at'e·brin (ăt'ē·brĭn), n. The antimalarial drug quinacrine hydrochloride.

at'el·ier (ăt'ĕl·yā; F. à'tĕ·lyā'), n. [F.] A workshop; a studio.

‖a tem'po (ä tĕm'pō). [It.] Music. In time; — used to direct a return to the regular rate of speed.

Ath'a·bas'can (ăth'ə·băs'kăn), n. An Indian of a tribe living about Lake Athabaska and belonging to the Athapascan linguistic family. — Ath'a·bas'can, adj.

ath'a·na'si·a (ăth'ə·nā'zhĭ·ə; -zhə), n. Also a·than'a·sy (ə·thăn'ə·sĭ). [Gr. athanasia, fr. a- not + thanatos death.] Deathlessness; immortality.

Ath'a·na'sian (ăth'ə·nā'zhăn; -shăn), adj. Of or pertaining to Athanasius (d. 373), bishop of Alexandria, who advocated the Homoousian doctrine against Arianism.

Athanasian Creed. A Latin confession of faith, of unknown authorship but originating probably in the 5th or 6th century. It has been bracketed with the Apostles' and the Nicene creeds in certain Western churches since the 13th century.

Ath'a·pas'can (ăth'ə·păs'kən), adj. Pertaining to or designating an extensive linguistic family of North American Indians including the Athabascans, Navahos, and Apaches. — n. An Athapascan Indian.

a'the·ism (ā'thē·ĭz'm), n [Gr atheos without god, fr. a- not + theos god.] 1. Disbelief in, or denial of, the existence of a supreme being; — disting. from agnosticism and opposed to theism. 2. Godlessness a'the·ist (-ĭst), n. [F. athéiste.] 1. One who holds to atheism. 2. A godless person.

Syn. Atheist, agnostic, deist, freethinker, unbeliever, infidel mean one who rejects some or all of the essential doctrines of religion An atheist is one who denies the existence of God; an agnostic is one who withholds belief because he does not know and is unwilling to accept as proof the evidence of revelation and spiritual experience; deist, in the historical sense, is one who rejects the conception of a supreme being as ruler and guide of men, but still believes in one as the creator and final judge of men; freethinker suggests loss of faith and a belief only in that which seems rational or credible; unbeliever, more negative than freethinker, carries no implication of a substitute for faith; infidel, less specific than the others, usually means one belonging to a religion (such as Mohammedanism) who rejects the Christian and, usually, the Jewish conception of God a'the·is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a'the·is'ti·cal (-tĭ·kăl), adj. Pert. to, characterized by, or given to atheism; also, impious. — a'the·is'ti·cal·ly, adv.

ath'el·ing (ăth'ĕl·ĭng), n. [AS ætheling noble, fr. æthelo nobility, good family.] An Anglo-Saxon prince or nobleman; esp., the heir apparent or a prince of the royal family.

A·the'na (ə·thē'nə), A·the'ne (-nē), n. [Gr. Athēnē.] Gr. Relig One of the greater Olympian deities, pre-eminent as a civic goddess, wise in industries of peace and arts of war; — often called Pallas or Pallas Athena and by the Romans identified with Minerva.

ath'e·nae'um, ath'e·ne'um (ăth'ē·nē'ŭm), n. [L Athenaeum, fr Gr Athēnaion a temple of Athena at Athens] 1 Rom Antiq A school of oratory, jurisprudence, and poetry, founded by Hadrian 2. A literary or scientific association or club. 3. A building or an apartment where a library, periodicals, and newspapers are kept for use.

a·ther'ma·nous (ā·thûr'mə·nŭs), adj. [Gr. a- not + thermainein to heat] Not transmitting radiant heat; — opposed to diathermanous — a·ther'man·cy (-măn·sĭ), n a·thirst' (ə·thûrst'), adj. 1. Thirsty. 2. Eager; longing. — Syn. See EAGER ath'lete (ăth'lēt), n. [L. athleta, fr. Gr. athlētēs, fr. athlein to contend for a prize, fr. athlos contest, athlon prize] Anyone trained or fit to contend in exercises requiring physical agility, stamina, and, often, strength ath·let'ic (ăth·lĕt'ĭk), adj. 1. Of or pertaining to athletes or athletics. 2. Befitting an athlete; strong; robust 3 Having the physique of an athlete. 4. Anthropol. Characterized by long limbs, large chest, and strong muscles; — disting. from asthenic and pyknic. 5. Used by athletes. — ath·let'i·cal·ly (-ĭ·kəl·ĭ), adv. — ath·let'i·cism (-ĭ·sĭz'm), n.

athletic foot. Also athlete's foot. Ringworm of the foot or feet, often acquired by athletes in gymnasiums.

ath·let'ics (ăth·lĕt'ĭks), n. sing. & pl.; see -ICS. a Athletic exercises; the games and sports of athletes; — usually construed as pl. b Skill or activity in athletic exercises; — usually construed as sing.

ath'o·dyd (ăth'ō·dĭd), n. [aero- + thermodynamic + duct.] Aeronautics. A jet engine consisting essentially of a continuous duct, or tube, of varying diameter which admits air at the forward end, adds heat to it by the combustion of fuel, and discharges it from the after end. The ram-jet engine is an athodyd.

at home or at–home' (ăt·hōm'), n. A reception for guests at one's home.

a·thwart' (ə·thwôrt'; naut. ə·thôrt'), adv. [a- on + thwart.] 1. Across, esp. obliquely. 2. So as to thwart. — prep 1. Across; hence, in opposition to. 2. Naut. Across the length, direction, or course of.

a·tilt' (ə·tĭlt'), adj. 1. Tilting, as in a tourney. 2. In the position of a cask tilted.

-a'tion (-ā'shŭn). [F. or L.; F. -ation, fr. L. -ationem. See -TION] A suffix forming nouns, often equivalent to the verbal substantive in -ing. Most of these nouns have verbs in -ate; as, alliter*ation;* many are derived through the French; as, inform*ation;* many are formed on verbs ending in -ize; as, civiliz*ation;* some, on native verbs; as, flirt*ation.* They denote: 1. Action (from the active verb senses); act of doing (what the verbal root denotes); as, visit*ation,* act of visiting. 2. State or quality (from passive and neuter verb senses and from participial adjectives); state, condition, quality, or degree of being (what the root word denotes); as, men need occup*ation* (condition of being occupied). 3. Concrete result or thing (transferred by causal association from verb senses); as, decor*ations* (things that decorate); discolor*ation* (product of discoloring).

-ative. [F. or L.; F. -atif, fem. -ative, fr. L. -ativus.] A suffix, with the sense of tending to, of the nature of, relating to, forming adjectives chiefly from verbs in -ate and nouns in -ty

At'kins, Tommy. See TOMMY ATKINS.

At·lan·te'an (ăt'lăn·tē'ən), adj. [L. Atlantēus.] Pertaining to, or resembling, Atlas; strong.

at·lan'tes (ăt·lăn'tēz), n. pl.; sing. ATLAS (ăt'ləs). [L. See ATLAS.] Arch. Figures or half figures of men, used as supporting columns or pilasters; telamones. Cf. CARYATID.

At·lan'tic (ăt·lăn'tĭk), adj. [L. Atlanticus.] 1. Of or pert. to Atlas. 2. Designating, pert. to, or bordering upon, the Atlantic Ocean.

Atlantic Charter. A declaration (made August 14, 1941, at a meeting in the North Atlantic) by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill of eight principles in the national policies of the U. S. and Great Britain, including disavowal of territorial aggrandizement, restoration of sovereign rights and self-government, equal access to raw materials, freedom of the seas, disarmament of aggressor nations.

Atlantic, or Atlantic standard, time. See STANDARD TIME.

At·lan'tis (ăt·lăn'tĭs), n. A traditional island west of the Pillars of Hercules, said by the ancients to have been sunk beneath the ocean by an earthquake.

At'las (ăt'ləs), n.; pl. (except in sense 2) ATLASES (-ĕz; -ĭz). [L. Atlas, -antis, fr. Gr. Atlas, fr. root of tlēnai to bear.] 1. Gr. Myth. In Homer, a divinity in charge of the pillars which upheld the heavens; usually, a Titan forced to support the heavens on his head and hands; later, a king metamorphosed into a lofty mountain. Hence, the bearer of a great burden. 2. [not cap.] Sing. of ATLANTES. 3 [not cap.] Anat. The first vertebra of the neck 4. [not cap.] A collection of maps in a volume; — said to have been named from a picture of Atlas supporting the world 5 [not cap.] A work in which subjects are exhibited in a tabular form or arrangement 6 [not cap] A large size of paper

At'li (ăt'lē), n. [ON. Atli Attila] Norse Myth. A king who marries Gudrun after Sigurd's death She slays him to avenge his treachery to her brothers.

at'man (ät'mən), n [Skr ātman breath, self] Hinduism. a The life principle, soul, or individual essence b [cap] The universal ego whence all individual selves arise

atmo-. [Gr. atmos.] A combining form meaning steam, vapor, as in atmosphere

at'mos·phere (ăt'mŏs·fēr; 27), n [atmo- + Gr sphaira sphere] 1. The whole mass of air surrounding the earth; also, the gaseous envelope of any celestial body; as, the atmosphere of Mars 2 A surrounding or pervading influence; as, the social atmosphere of a place 3 The air in any locality, as, a moist atmosphere 4 The aesthetic tone or mood of, or harmony of effects in, a work of art; as, a novel rich in atmosphere 5 Physics The pressure of the air at sea level (about 14 7 pounds to the square inch), used as a unit.

at'mos·pher'ic (-fĕr'ĭk), adj 1. a Of or pertaining to the atmosphere; as, atmospheric air, atmospheric pressure b Caused, or operated on, by the atmosphere; pneumatic; as, an atmospheric engine. 2 Of, possessing, or imparting, atmosphere or an atmosphere. — at'mos·pher'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl), adj — at'mos·pher'i·cal·ly, adv

at'mos·pher'ics (-ĭks), n pl., or atmospheric disturbances Radio. = STATIC

at'oll (ăt'ŏl; ə·tŏl'), n. [Maldivian atolu] A coral island or islands, consisting of a reef surrounding a lagoon.

at'om (ăt'ŭm), n. [From L., fr. Gr. atomos uncut, indivisible, as n , atom, fr. a- not + tomos cut] 1 One of the minute particles postulated in atomism. 2. A particle; iot. 3. Chem. & Physics. The smallest particle of an element. See ATOMIC THEORY.

a·tom'ic (ə·tŏm'ĭk), adj. Also a·tom'i·cal (-ĭ·kăl). 1. Of or pert. to atoms, atomic energy, or atomic bombs. 2 Very minute; tiny. 3. Phys. Chem. Separated into atoms; as, atomic hydrogen — atomically, adv atomic, or atom, bomb. Also A'–bomb' (ā'bŏm'), n. A bomb whose violent explosive power is due to the sudden release of atomic energy. The release results from the splitting, or fission, of heavy nuclei (plutonium, uranium) by bombardment with particles (neutrons).

atomic energy. Energy liberated by changes in the nucleus of an atom, as by fission of a heavy nucleus or condensation of light nuclei into heavier ones with accompanying loss of mass.

at'o·mic'i·ty (ăt'ō·mĭs'ĭ·tĭ), n. 1. Chem. a Valence. b The number of atoms in the molecule of an element. c The number of replaceable atoms or groups in the molecule of a compound. 2 Physics & Chem. The state of consisting of atoms atomic mass. Chem. The relative mass of an atom, expressed on the scale O^{16} (oxygen) = 16. For each isotope its value is very close to an integer called the mass number.

atomic number. Chem. A number, experimentally determined, denoting the position of an element in a series of increasing complexity (from 1, for hydrogen, to 94 or more). See ELEMENT, Table. An arrangement of the elements in the order of these numbers and with regard to the periodic variation in their properties is called the periodic table (which see). Abbr. at. no.

atomic pile. See PILE, n., 5.

atomic theory or hypothesis. Chem. & Physics. The theory that all material substances are composed of minute particles or atoms of a limited number of kinds; hence, any theory concerning the structure of the atom. According to modern discoveries, the atom is now regarded not as an ultimate particle but as a system consisting of a small dense nucleus having a positive electric charge of 1 to 92 or more (depending on the kind of atom) and 1 to 92 or more electrons surrounding it in concentric "shells." The nucleus is considered a combination of protons and neutrons. Atoms of the same element can have different weights (see ISOTOPE) but resemble one another very closely in chemical properties. See ELEMENT, PERIODIC TABLE.

atomic weight. Chem. & Physics. The relative weight of the atom of an element, referred to that of some element, as oxygen or hydrogen, as standard. The usual chemical standard (the one used in this Dictionary) is 16 for oxygen (the natural mixture of isotopes). Abbr. at. wt. See ELEMENT, Table.

at'om·ism (ăt'ŭm·ĭz'm), n. Philos. The doctrine that the universe is composed of simple, indivisible, and minute particles (atoms). — at'om·ist (-ĭst), n. & adj. — at'om·is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), adj.

at'om·ize (-īz), v. t. To reduce to atoms or to fine particles, usually in a spray. — at'om·iz'er (-īz'ər), n.

at'o·my (ăt'ō·mĭ), n.; pl. -MIES (-mĭz). An atom; mite.

at'o·my, n. [For anatomy, taken as an atomy.] Obs. exc. Jocular. A skeleton. Shak.

a·ton'al (ā·tōn'ăl; -'l), adj. [See A- not.] Music. Characterized by atonality. — a·ton'al·ly, adv.

a·ton'al·ism (-ĭz'm), n. Music. The quality of atonality as a principle of composition. — a·ton'al·is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), adj.

a'to·nal'i·ty (ā'tō·năl'ĭ·tĭ), n. [See A- not.] Music. Absence of tonality, — the characteristic of a style of composition in which the material is organized without reference to key or tonal center, using impartially the tones of the chromatic scale in a strongly dissonant manner.

a·tone' (ə·tōn'), v. i. [From AT ONE. See under AT.] 1. Obs. To agree. 2. To make amends for an offense. — v. t. 1. Obs. To reconcile. 2. To expiate. 3. To make harmonious. — a·ton'er (-tōn'ər), n.

a·tone'ment (-mĕnt), n. 1. Archaic. Concord; reconciliation. 2. Satisfactory reparation for an offense or injury; — with for. 3. The redeeming effect of Christ's incarnation, sufferings, and death; also, reconciliation between God and men, esp. through Christ. 4. Christian Science. The exemplification of man's unity with God, whereby man reflects divine Truth, Life, and Love. Mary Baker Eddy.

Atonement, Day of. See Yom Kippur, under JEWISH HOLIDAYS.

a·ton'ic (ā·tŏn'ĭk), adj. 1. Med. Characterized by atony; as, an atonic disease. 2. Gram Unaccented; as, an atonic syllable. 3. Phonet. Without tone or vocality; voiceless — n 1. Gram. A word or syllable with no accent. 2. Phonet. A voiceless consonant.

at'o·ny (ăt'ō·nĭ), n. [From ML., fr. Gr. atonia slackness, deriv. of a- not + tonos tone.] 1. Med. Lack of tone, or vital energy; weakness of the system or of an organ. 2. Phonet. Weakness from lack of stress, or accent a·top' (ā·tŏp'), adj. & adv On, at, or to the top. — prep. On the top of.

cal·cif'er·ous (kăl·sĭf'ĕr·ŭs), adj. Also cal·cif'ic (-ĭk), adj. [L. calx, calcis, lime + -ferous.] Producing, or having, calcite.

cal'ci·fi·ca'tion (kăl'sĭ·fĭ·kā'shŭn), n. 1. Process of calcifying; deposition of insoluble lime salts in a tissue, etc. 2. A calcified structure.

cal'ci·fuge (kăl'sĭ·fūj), n. [L. calci- + fugere to flee.] Bot. A plant not normally growing on calcareous soils. — cal·cif'u·gous (kăl·sĭf'ū·gŭs), adj.

cal'ci·fy (kăl'sĭ·fī), v. t. & i.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING. To make or become stony or calcareous by the deposit or secretion of lime salts.

cal'ci·mine (kăl'sĭ·mīn; -mĭn), n. Also kal'so·mine (kăl'sō-). [L. calx, calcis, lime.] A white or colored wash for a ceiling or other interior plastering. — v. t. To wash or cover with calcimine.

cal·cine' (kăl·sīn'; kăl'sīn; -sĭn), v. t. & i. [F. calciner, fr. L. calx, calcis, lime.] 1. To make or become powdery by action of heat. 2. To oxidize, as by heat. 3. To frit. — cal'ci·na'tion (kăl'sĭ·nā'shŭn), n. — cal·cin'a·to'ry (kăl·sĭn'ə·tō'rĭ; -tĕr·ĭ; kăl'sĭn-), adj. & n.

cal'ci·phile (kăl'sĭ·fīl; -fĭl), n. [calci- + -phile.] = CALCICOLE. — cal·ciph'i·lous (kăl·sĭf'ĭ·lŭs), cal'ci·phil'ic (kăl'sĭ·fĭl'ĭk), adj.

calcium carbide. A crystalline solid, CaC_2, often resembling gray limestone, used for generating acetylene, etc.

calcium carbonate. A solid, $CaCO_3$, occurring in nature as calcite and aragonite and found also in plant ashes, bones, shells, etc., and widely used in making lime and Portland cement.

calcium chloride. A crystalline compound, $CaCl_2$, used, in its anhydrous state as a white porous solid, as a drying agent, to lay dust, etc.

calcium cyanamide. Also -id. Chem. A compound, $CaCN_2$, obtained in impure, cokelike form by passing dry nitrogen over calcium carbide at 1200° C. (2190° F.), and used as a fertilizer and as a source of other nitrogen compounds.

calcium light. = LIMELIGHT, n., 1.

calcium phosphate. See PHOSPHATE.

calc'–sin'ter (kălk'sĭn'tĕr), n. [G. kalksinter, fr. kalk lime + sinter sinter.] Calcareous sinter.

calc'–spar', calc'spar' (-spär'), n. Calcite.

calc'–tu'fa (-tōō'fə; -tū'fə), calc'–tuff' (-tŭf'), n. Calcareous tufa.

cal'cu·la·ble (kăl'kū·lə·b'l), adj. 1. Subject to, or ascertainable by, calculation. 2. Dependable; reliable.

cal'cu·late (-lāt), v. t. [L. calculatus, past part. of calculare to calculate, fr. calculus a stone used in reckoning, fr. calx, calcis, limestone.] 1. To determine by mathematical processes. 2. To design or adapt for a purpose; as, calculated to succeed. 3. Colloq., U. S. To plan; expect; "reckon."

Syn. Calculate, compute, estimate, reckon mean to determine something mathematically. Calculate is preferred when highly intricate processes are followed and when the result, because of difficulties involved, is problematical; compute is the simpler term, implying a simpler arithmetical process and an exact result; estimate, as here compared, is used only of costs, etc., determined in advance and, therefore, usually implies approximate exactness in the result; reckon, often colloquial for compute, usually implies a rough-and-ready process, such as mental figuring.

— v. i. 1. To forecast consequences; estimate. 2. To count or rely; with on.

cal'cu·lat'ing (-lāt'ĭng), adj. Making calculations; hence, given to contrivance or forecasting of what will promote self-interest; scheming; as, a calculating disposition, person.

cal'cu·la'tion (kăl'kū·lā'shŭn), n. 1. Act or process, or result, of calculating; computation; reckoning; also, forecast. 2. Deliberate prudence; studied care; discretion. — cal'cu·la'tive (kăl'kū·lā'tĭv), adj.

cal'cu·la'tor (kăl'kū·lā'tĕr), n. [L.] 1. One who calculates. 2. A book of tables for facilitating computation. 3. A machine for the mechanical performance of mathematical operations; — called also calculating machine.

cal'cu·lous (-lŭs), adj. Med. Caused or characterized by a calculus or calculi cal'cu·lus (-lŭs), n.; pl. -LI (-lī). [L. See CALCULATE.] 1. A concretion (def. 2 a) formed in the body, as in the bladder or kidneys; a stone. 2. Math. a A method of computation; any process of reasoning by the use of symbols; any branch of mathematics involving calculation. b Specif., a method of analysis, usually called differential calculus when dealing with the rate of change of a variable function, and integral calculus when concerned with the theory and application of integrals, their evaluation, derivation, etc.

‖cal·de'ra (kăl·dā'rə), n. [Sp., caldron.] Geol. A large crater formed by the collapse of the central part of a volcano.

cal'dron, caul'dron (kôl'drŭn), n. [ONF. caudron, cauderon, fr. L. caldarium suitable for warming, fr. calidus warm, fr. calere to be warm.] A large kettle or boiler.

‖ca·lèche' (kə·lĕsh'), n.; pl. CALÈCHES (-lĕsh'ĕz; -ĭz; F. -lĕsh'). Also ca·leche' (kə·lĕsh'). [F.] 1. = CALASH, 1. 2. In Quebec (City) a two-wheeled vehicle with a folding hood or top.

cal'e·fa'cient (kăl'ē·fā'shĕnt), adj. [L. calefaciens, pres. part. of calefacere to make warm.] Making warm; heating. — n. A calefacient remedy.

cal'e·fac'tion (-făk'shŭn), n. [L. calefactio.] A warming; state of being warmed. — cal'e·fac'tive (-tĭv), adj. — cal'e·fac'to·ry (-tŏ·rĭ), adj.

cal'en·dar (kăl'ĕn·dĕr), n. [L. calendarium an account book, fr. calendae, kalendae, calends.] 1. A system of fixing the divisions of time, as years, months, weeks, and days, adapted to the purposes of civil life. See CHINESE CALENDAR, GREGORIAN CALENDAR, JEWISH CALENDAR, JULIAN CALENDAR, MOHAMMEDAN CALENDAR, PERPETUAL CALENDAR, REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR, ROMAN CALENDAR; cf. also HOLIDAY, MONTH, YEAR. 2. A tabular register of the divisions of a given year, referring the days of each month to the days of the week. 3. Formerly, a guide or direction; pattern. 4. An orderly list; schedule; specif.: a A list of causes to be tried in court. b A list of canonized saints, martyrs, or the like. c Brit. A university or college catalogue. Cap'u·let (kăp'ū·lĕt), n. See ROMEO.

cap'y·ba'ra (kăp'ĭ·bä'rȧ), n. [Pg. capybara, Sp. capibara, of Tupian origin.] A large South American rodent (Hydrochoerus capybara), largely aquatic in habit. It is the largest existing rodent, over 4 ft. long and 2 ft. high.

car (kär), n. [ONF. carre, fr. LL. carra, of Celt. origin.] 1. A vehicle moved on wheels: a In general, carriage, cart, etc. b Chiefly Poetic. A chariot of war or of triumph. c Some particular vehicle so called, as a passenger automobile. 2. A vehicle adapted to the rails of a railroad. 3. The cage of an elevator or lift. 4. That portion of an airship or balloon which is intended to carry the power plant, personnel, cargo, or equipment. 5. U. S. A floating perforated box for keeping fish, lobsters, etc., alive.

ca'ra·ba'o (kä'rä·bä'ō), n.; pl. -BAOS (-bä'ōz). [Sp., fr. Malay karbau.] Phil. I. A water buffalo (see BUFFALO).

car'a·bin (kăr'ȧ·bĭn), car'a·bine (-bĭn). Vars. of CARBINE.

car'a·bi·neer', car'a·bi·nier' (-bĭ·nēr'), n. [F. carabinier.] A soldier, usually a cavalry soldier, armed with a carbine.

ca'ra·ca'ra (kä'rȧ·kä'rȧ; kȧ·rä'kȧ·rä'), n. [Sp. & Pg. caracará, of Tupian origin.] Any of certain large, mostly South American hawks of vulturelike habits, esp. the common species (Polyborus plancus) and the black caracara (Ibycter ater).

car'a·cole (kăr'ȧ·kōl), car'a·col (-kŏl), n. [F., appar. fr. a form of L. conchylium snail.] Manège. A half turn to right or left; loosely, any turn in a zigzag course, as in prancing. — v. i.; -COLED (-kōld), -COLLED (-kŏld); -COL'ING (-kōl'ĭng), -COL'LING (-kŏl'ĭng). Manège. To perform a caracole, or move in caracoles.

car'a·cul (kăr'ȧ·kŭl). Var. of KARAKUL.

ca·rafe' (kȧ·rȧf'), n. [F.] A glass water bottle.

car'a·geen' (kăr'ȧ·gēn'). Var. of CARRAGEEN.

car'a·mel (kăr'ȧ·mĕl), n. [F., fr. OF., fr. MLL. cannamellis sugar cane.] 1. Burnt sugar, used for coloring and flavoring. 2. (pron. -mĕl) A kind of firm but plastic candy.

car'a·mel·ize (-īz), v. t. & i. Also car'a·mel. To turn into caramel.

ca·ran'goid (kȧ·răng'goid), adj. [From Caranx, type genus, fr. Sp. carangа + -oid.] Of, like, or pertaining to a large family (Carangidae) of marine spiny-finned fishes, containing the pompanos, cavallas, etc., with narrow bodies and widely forked tails. — n. A carangoid fish.

car'a·pace (kăr'ȧ·pās), n. [F., fr. Sp. carapacho.] Zool. A bony or horny case or shield covering the back or part of the back of certain animals, as turtles and armadillos, and lobsters, crabs, and other crustaceans. See KING CRAB, Illust.

car'at (kăr'ăt), n. [F., through It. & Ar., fr. Gr. keration little horn, carob bean, carat.] Abbr. car. 1. A unit of weight for precious stones. See WEIGHT, Table 2. 2. A twenty-fourth part; — used to express the fineness of a gold alloy; as, 14 carats fine, i. e., being 14 parts gold and 10 alloy.

car'a·van (kăr'ȧ·văn'; kăr'ȧ·vän'), n. [From F., fr. Per. kārwān a caravan (sense 1).] 1. A company of travelers on a journey through desert or hostile regions, esp. in Asia or Africa; also, the vehicles in which such a company travel. Cf. SAFARI. 2. A covered vehicle of various sorts; as: a Eng. Formerly, a large passenger vehicle. b A van. Cf. CONESTOGA WAGON.

car'a·van'sa·ry (kăr'ȧ·văn'sȧ·rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). Also car'a·van'·se·rai (-sĕ·rī; -rä). [From F., fr. Per. kārwānsarāī, fr. kārwān caravan + sarāī palace, inn.] 1. A kind of inn, in the East, where caravans rest at night, being a large bare building surrounding a court. 2. A large hotel or inn.

car'a·vel (kăr'ȧ·vĕl), n. Also car'vel (kär'vĕl), car'a·velle. [Through F., Pg., & LL., fr. Gr. karabos a kind of ship.] Naut. Any of several types of vessels, usually small sailing vessels; esp., in the 15th and 16th centuries, a small vessel with broad bows, high poop, and lateen sails.

car'a·way (kăr'ȧ·wā), n. [Through Sp. & Ar., fr. Gr. karon.] A biennial yellow-flowered aromatic herb (Carum carvi) of the carrot family, yielding aromatic, pungent seeds (caraway seeds), used in cookery, confectionery, and as a carminative.

car·bam'ate (kär·băm'āt; kär'bȧ·māt), n. A salt or ester of carbamic acid.

car·bam'ic (kär·băm'ĭk), adj. Chem. Pert. to or designating an acid, $NH_2.CO_2H$, occurring as a salt of ammonium in commercial ammonium carbonate.

car'ba·zole (kär'bȧ·zōl), n. [carbon + az- + -ol.] Chem. A crystalline, feebly basic compound, $C_{12}H_9N$, in anthracene. It is the parent of a number of dyes.

car'bide (kär'bīd; -bĭd), n. Chem. A binary compound of carbon; esp., calcium carbide (which see).

car'bine (kär'bĭn; -bēn), n. [F. carabine.] A short light rifle or, formerly, musket, used esp. by cavalry. See RIFLE, Illust.

car'bi·neer' (kär'bĭ·nēr'). Var. of CARABINEER.

car'bi·nol (kär'bĭ·nōl; -nŏl), n. Chem. Methanol, CH_3OH (in names of derivatives); also, by extension, any alcohol derived from it.

car'bo·hy'drate (kär'bō·hī'drāt), n. [carbon + hydrate.] Chem. Any of a group of neutral compounds composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, and including the sugars, starches, etc. Carbohydrates are formed by all green plants (see PHOTOSYNTHESIS) and constitute a major class of foods for animals (see FOOD, n., 1).

car'bo·lat'ed (kär'bō·lāt'ĕd; -ĭd), adj. Impregnated with carbolic acid.

car·bol'ic (kär·bŏl'ĭk), adj. [L. carbo coal + oleum oil.] Pertaining to or designating a weak monoacid derived from coal tar and other sources and called also phenol.

car'bo·lize (kär'bō·līz), v. t. To mix or treat with carbolic acid.

car'bon (kär'bŏn), n. [F. carbone, fr. L. carbo coal.] 1. Chem. An element occurring native as the diamond and as graphite, and forming a constituent of coal, petroleum, and asphalt, of limestone and other carbonates, and of all organic compounds. Symbol, C; at. no., 6; at. wt., 12.010. Carbon is also obtained artificially as lampblack, bone black, charcoal, coke, etc., in varying degrees of purity. It has a remarkable property of forming complex compounds, because of the ability of its atoms to unite into chains or rings. 2. A piece of carbon paper; also, a carbon copy. 3. Elec. A carbon rod used in an arc lamp; also, a plate of carbon used as one of the elements of a voltaic battery. — adj. Of, pert. to, resembling, or treated with carbon.

car'bo·na'ceous (kär'bō·nā'shŭs), adj. Pertaining to, containing, or composed of carbon.

car'bo·na'do (-nā'dō), n.; pl. -DOES or -DOS (-dōz). [From Sp., fr. L. carbo coal.] A broiled or grilled piece of meat or fish, scored before cooking. — v. t.; -DOED (-dōd); -DO·ING (-dō·ĭng). 1. To make a carbonado of. 2. To hack or slash.

car'bo·na'do (-nā'dō), n. [Pg., carbonated.] An opaque dark-colored diamond found in Brazil, used esp. for cutting and drilling hard materials.

car'bon·ate (kär'bŏn·āt), n. [F.] Chem. A salt or ester of carbonic acid; as, carbonate of lime (= CALCIUM CARBONATE); carbonate of soda (= SODIUM CARBONATE). — (-āt), v. t. 1. To burn to carbon. 2. Chem. a To convert into a carbonate. b To impregnate with carbonic acid (as, carbonated lime) or carbon dioxide (as, carbonated water). Cf. AERATE, v. t., 1. — car'bon·a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n.

carbon bisulfide. Carbon disulfide.

carbon black. Specif., gas black.

carbon copy. A copy made with carbon paper; hence, an exact duplicate; a replica.

carbon dioxide. Chem. A heavy colorless gas, CO_2, extinguishing flame. Water charged with it becomes the soda water of the shops and the carbonated water of natural springs. Plants use it in photosynthesis, retaining the carbon for food material and giving out the oxygen.

carbon disulfide. A colorless inflammable liquid, CS_2, used as a solvent for rubber, etc., as an insecticide, etc.

car·bon'ic (kär·bŏn'ĭk), adj. Chem. a Of, pertaining to, or obtained from carbon. b Designating an acid (carbonic acid, H_2CO_3), existing only in solution and reacting with bases to form carbonates.

car·bon'ic–ac'id gas. Carbon dioxide.

car'bon·if'er·ous (kär'bŏn·ĭf'ẽr·ŭs), adj. [carbon + -ferous.] 1. Producing or containing carbon or coal. 2. [cap.] Geol. Of, pert. to, or designating the period of the Paleozoic era between the Devonian and the Permian, or the system of rocks formed during this period; — so called from the coal beds in the system. By some divided into the Lower Carboniferous or Mississippian and the Upper Carboniferous or Pennsylvanian (containing the coal measures: which see). — Car'bon·if'er·ous, n.

car'bon·ize (kär'bŏn·īz), v. t. 1. To convert into a residue or carbon, as by fire; to char. 2. To impregnate, cover, or combine with carbon. — car'bon·i·za'tion (-ĭ·zā'shŭn; -ī·zā'-), n.

carbon monoxide. Chem. A colorless odorless gas, CO, a product of the incomplete combustion of carbon. It burns with a pale-blue flame, forming carbon dioxide. It is very poisonous.

carbon paper. a Thin paper coated with a preparation of lampblack, or of some color, used in making copies. Pressure on the back causes the color to be transferred to paper laid against it. b See CARBON PROCESS.

carbon process. Photog. A printing process depending on the effect of light on bichromated gelatin. Paper coated with a mixture of the gelatin and a pigment is called carbon paper or carbon tissue.

carbon tetrachloride. Chem. A colorless noninflammable liquid, CCl_4, of chloroformlike odor, used as a solvent and detergent, and as a fire extinguisher.

car'bon-yl (kär'bŏn·ĭl; -ēl), n. [carbon + -yl.] Chem. a The bivalent radical CO, occurring in aldehydes, ketones, organic acids, etc. b A compound of this radical with a metal; as, nickel carbonyl, $Ni(CO)_4$. — car'bon-yl'ic (-ĭl'ĭk), adj.

Car'bo-run'dum (kär'bō·rŭn'dŭm), n. A trade-mark for certain abrasives.

car·box'yl (kär·bŏk'sĭl), n. [carbon + oxygen + -yl.] Chem. The univalent radical CO_2H, the characteristic group of most organic acids, as formic, acetic, benzoic acids, etc. — car'box-yl'ic (kär'bŏk·sĭl'ĭk), adj.

car'boy (kär'boi), n. [Per. qarābah.] A very large glass bottle enclosed in a box, or wickerwork, esp. for corrosives. Cf. DEMIJOHN.

car'bun·cle (kär'bŭng·k'l), n. [ONF., fr. L. carbunculus, dim. of carbo coal.] 1. Formerly, any of several red precious stones, as the ruby; now, the garnet cut cabochon. 2. a Med. A painful local inflammation of the subcutaneous tissue, larger and more serious than a boil. b A pimple or red spot, due to intemperance. 3. A brown, red-yellow in hue, of low saturation and low brilliance. See COLOR. — car·bun'cu·lar (kär·bŭng'kū·lĕr), adj.

car'bu·ret (kär'bū·rĕt), n. [From CARBON.] A carbide. — v. t.; -RET'ED or -RET'TED (-rĕt'ĕd; -ĭd); -RET'ING or -RET'TING. 1. To combine chemically with carbon. 2. To charge with volatile carbon compounds; as, to carburet air or gas by passing it through a light petroleum oil. — car'bu·re'tion (-rĕsh'ŭn), n.

car'bu·ret'ant (-rĕt'ănt), n. A carbureting agent.

car'bu·ret'or, car'bu·ret'tor (-rā'tĕr; -rĕt'ĕr), n. An apparatus in which air or gas is carbureted.

car'bu·rize (-rīz), v. t. a To combine or impregnate with carbon. b = CARBURET, v. t., 2. — car'bu·ri·za'tion (-rī·zā'shŭn; -rĭ·zā'-), n.

car'ca·jou (kär'kȧ·jōō; -zhōō), n. [Can. F. corrupt. of an Indian name of the wolverine.] The wolverine; also, the Canada lynx, the cougar, or the badger of North America.

car'ca·net (kär'kȧ·nĕt), n. [Dim. fr. F., fr. ML. carcannum.] Archaic. An ornamental chain, necklace, collar, or, sometimes, headband, usually golden or jeweled.

car'cass (kär'kȧs), n.; pl. CARCASSES (-ĕz; -ĭz). Also car'case (-kȧs). [From F., fr. It. carcassa.] 1. A dead body of a beast or (in contempt) of a man; esp., the dressed body (trunk) of an animal slaughtered for food. 2. Contemptuous. The living body. 3. The worthless or decaying remains of a great and once comely or vital thing; the shell or husk; as, a ship's carcass. 4. The foundation structure of a pneumatic tire. See TIRE, Illust.

car·cin'o·gen (kär·sĭn'ō·jĕn; kär'sĭ·nō·jĕn), n. [Gr. karkinos cancer + -gen.] Any cancer-producing substance.

car'ci·no'ma (kär'sĭ·nō'mȧ), n.; pl. -NOMATA (-mȧ·tȧ), -NOMAS (-mȧz). [L., fr. Gr. karkinōma cancer, fr. karkinos crab. See -OMA.] A form of cancer consisting of a malignant growth originating in epithelial tissue. See CANCER, SARCOMA. Many varieties are distinguished. — car'ci·nom'a·tous (-nŏm'ȧ·tŭs; -nō'mȧ·tŭs), adj.

card (kärd), n. [F. carte, fr. L. charta paper, fr. Gr. chartēs a leaf of paper.] 1. A playing card. 2. pl. A game or games played with cards; card playing; — often construed as a singular. 3. A person or thing that can be manipulated as a card; as, he is a safe card or a likely card; also, Colloq., an eccentric; a droll fellow. 4. A flat, stiff, usually rectangular, piece of paper or thin pasteboard, used for various purposes; as, a post card, Christmas card, visiting card; to receive cards, or invitations, for a wedding. 5. Specif., a program of, or a form for keeping a record of, the items of races, games, regattas, etc.; hence, an attraction; as, this will be a good card for the fair. — v. t. 1. To place or fasten on, or by means of, a card. 2. To provide with a card. 3. To enter or list on cards.

card, n. [F. carde teasel, card, fr. L. cardus, carduus, thistle.] 1. An implement for raising a nap on cloth. 2. An instrument or machine (card'ing ma·chine') for disentangling and arranging the fibers of cotton, wool, flax, etc. — v. t. To cleanse and disentangle by a card or carding machine before spinning; as, to card wool. Carding disentangles and collects all the fibers, of whatever length, and thus differs from combing, in which only the longer fibers are collected while the short staple is combed away. — card'er, n.

car'da·mom (kär'dȧ·mŭm), n. Also car'da·mum (-mŭm), car'da·mon (-mŭn). [F. and L.; F., fr. L., fr. Gr. kardamōmon.] 1. The aromatic capsular fruit of an East Indian herb (Elettaria cardamomum) of the ginger family, with seeds used as a condiment and in medicine. 2. The plant.

card'board' (kärd'bōrd'; 70), n. A stiff compact pasteboard of various qualities, for making cards, etc.

car'di·ac (kär'dĭ·ăk), car·di'a·cal (kär·dī'ȧ·kăl), adj. [Through F. and L., fr. Gr. kardiakos, fr. kardia heart.] Anat. 1. Of, pert. to, or situated near the heart; as, cardiac murmur; cardiac muscles, nerves. 2. Of, pert. to, or designating the part of the stomach into which the esophagus opens, or the whole stomach except the narrow pyloric end. — n. 1. A medicine that excites stomach action. Cf. STOMACHIC, n. 2. Colloq. A sufferer from heart disease.

car'di·al'gi·a (kär'dĭ·ăl'jĭ·ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. kardialgia, fr. kardia heart + algos pain.] Med. A burning or gnawing pain, or feeling of distress, felt near the heart and usually a symptom of indigestion; heartburn.

car'di·gan (kär'dĭ·găn), n., or cardigan jacket. [After an earl of Cardigan.] A knitted worsted jacket.

car'di·nal (kär'dĭ·năl; -n'l), adj. [F. and L.; F., fr. L. cardinalis, fr. cardo hinge, turning point.] 1. Of basic importance; main; chief; as, cardinal principles. 2. Of or pertaining to a cardinal. 3. Of the color cardinal red. — Syn. See ESSENTIAL. — n. 1. R.C.Ch. One of the ecclesiastical princes who constitute the pope's council, or the college of cardinals, and who are appointed by the pope. 2. pl. Short for CARDINAL NUMBERS, POINTS, etc. 3. A woman's short hooded cloak, originally of scarlet cloth. 4. Usually cardinal red. A color, yellowish-red in hue, of high saturation and low brilliance. See COLOR. 5. = CARDINAL BIRD. — car'di·nal·ly, adv. — car'di·nal·ship', n.

car'di·nal·ate (-āt), n. Office, rank, or dignity of a cardinal; also, the cardinals collectively.

cardinal bird. Any of several bright-colored songbirds of the genus Richmondena, esp. R. cardinalis, of the southern and middle United States, the male of which has bright-red plumage and bill; — called also cardinal grosbeak.

cardinal flower. The brilliant red flower of a North American herb (Lobelia cardinalis) of the lobelia family; also, the plant itself.

cardinal number or numeral. One of the numbers used in simple counting or in reply to the question, how many? — disting. from ordinal number (see ORDINAL, adj., 1). See NUMBER, Table.

cardinal points. The four main points of the compass.

cardinal virtues. Prudence, justice, temperance, and fortitude, the four chief natural virtues. Some modern writers add the three "theological" virtues, faith, hope, and charity. Cf. DEADLY SINS.

car'di·o- (kär'dĭ·ō-), car'di- (kär'dĭ-). [Gr. kardia heart.] A combining form denoting of or pertaining to the heart (and); cardiac; as in car'di·o–a·or'tic.

car'di·o·gram' (-grăm'), n. [cardio- + -gram.] The curve or tracing made by a cardiograph.

car'di·o·graph' (-grăf'; 9), n. [cardio- + -graph.] An instrument that registers graphically the duration and character of the heart's movements. — car'di·o·graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), adj. — car'di·og'ra·phy (-ŏg'rȧ·fĭ), n.

car'di·ol'o·gy (kär'dĭ·ŏl'ō·jĭ), n. [cardio- + -logy.] The science that treats of the heart, its action, diseases, etc. — car'di·ol'o·gist (-ĭst), n.

car·di'tis (kär·dī'tĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. kardia heart + -itis.] Myocarditis. Cf. ENDOCARDITIS, PERICARDITIS.

card'sharp' (kärd'shärp'), n. Also card'sharp'er. A professional swindler at cards. — card'sharp'ing, n.

car'du·a'ceous (kär'dū·ā'shŭs), adj. [L. carduus thistle.] Belonging to the aster or thistle family (Carduaceae). See ASTER, 1.

care (kâr), n. [AS. caru, cearu.] 1. Mental suffering; grief. 2. A burdensome sense of responsibility; heavy anxiety; also, a cause of anxiety. 3. Painstaking or watchful attention; heed; caution. 4. A caring, or liking; — with of or for; as, care for the public good. 5. Charge, oversight, management, or custody; as, under a doctor's care. 6 A person or thing that is an object of care.

Syn. Care, concern, solicitude, anxiety, worry mean a troubling and engrossing emotion or affair. Care implies oppression of the mind weighed down by responsibility or disquieted by apprehension; concern suggests less oppression than care, but a troubled state of mind because of one's interest, affection, or the like; solicitude implies profound concern and connotes either thoughtfulness for another's welfare or almost hovering attentiveness to one ill, in pain, or the like; anxiety stresses anguish of fear coupled with uncertainty or expectancy of misfortune; worry suggests more mental activity than anxiety, such as fretting or stewing over problems, persons, or situations that may or may not be a real cause of anxiety.

— v. i. 1. To have, feel, or exercise care. 2. To have a wish or inclination (to) or affection (for). 3. To mind; to be concerned; to have objection; — in negative and conditional expressions; as, "Will you go?" — "I do not care if I do"; "Would you care if I were to decline?" — car'er (kâr'ĕr), n.

ca·reen' (kȧ·rēn'), v. t. [From F., fr. It., fr. L. carina keel of a ship.] a To cause (a vessel) to lean over on one side; also, to clean, calk, or repair (a vessel in this position). b To cause to heel over, as a ship; to tip or incline, as a cart. — v. i. 1. To heel over, as a ship under a breeze; hence, to lurch; to sway from side to side. 2. To careen or renovate a ship; also, of a ship, to undergo such careening. — n. A careening; also, a careened position. — ca·reen'er, n.

ca·reer' (kȧ·rēr'), n. [F. carrière highroad, racecourse, fr. It. carriera, fr. carro wagon.] 1. A running; a course, esp. a swift one; hence, speed; full speed; — chiefly in phrases such as in full career. 2. Obs. a A short gallop; a gambol or frisk. b A course, field, etc., as for racing. 3. Course of a person's life, esp. in some particular pursuit. 4. Notable or conspicuous progress or success in one's chosen calling; as, to make a career for oneself. 5. A profession or other calling demanding special preparation and undertaken as a lifework; as, to follow diplomacy as a career.
